Terrorism and Its Relation to United States Armed Forces is discussed in chapter 2 In light of the violence related to protests in Charlottesville VA on August 12 2017 policymakers may be interested in how the concepts of domestic terrorism hate crime and homegrown violent extremism compare with one another as described in chapter 3 They are fairly distinct ideas that federal law enforcement agencies use to categorize key types of criminals whose illegal activities are at least partly ideologically motivated November 1998 the FBI activated NICS for the purposes of determining an individual s firearms transfer and possession eligibility whenever an unlicensed individual seeks to acquire a firearm from a federally licensed gun dealer Federal law enumerates several grounds that disqualify someone from firearms eligibility However being a known or suspected terrorist is not a federal firearms eligibility disqualifier as reported in chapter 4

The Domestic Terrorist Threat Jerome P. Bjelopera,2012-11-05 The emphasis of counterterrorism policy in the United States since Al

Qaeda's attacks of September 11 2001 9/11 has been on jihadist terrorism. However, in the last decade, domestic terrorists—people who commit crimes within the homeland and draw inspiration from U.S.-based extremist ideologies and movements—have killed American citizens and damaged property across the country. Not all of these criminals have been prosecuted under terrorism statutes. This latter point is not meant to imply that domestic terrorists should be taken any less seriously than other terrorists. The Department of Justice (DOJ) and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) do not officially list domestic terrorist organizations, but they have openly delineated domestic terrorist threats. These include individuals who commit crimes in the name of ideologies supporting animal rights, environmental rights, anarchism, white supremacy, anti-government ideals, black separatism, and anti-abortion beliefs. Five discussion topics in this report may help explain domestic terrorism's significance for policymakers:

1. Level of Activity: Domestic terrorists have been responsible for orchestrating more than two dozen incidents since 9/11, and there appears to be a growth in anti-government extremist activity as measured by watchdog groups in the last several years.
2. Use of Nontraditional Tactics: A large number of domestic terrorists do not necessarily use tactics such as suicide bombings or airplane hijackings.
3. Exploitation of the Internet: Domestic terrorists, much like their jihadist analogues, are often Internet-savvy and use the medium as a resource for their operations.
4. Decentralized Nature of the Threat: Many domestic terrorists rely on the concept of leaderless resistance. This involves two levels of activity: On an operational level, militant underground ideologically motivated cells or individuals engage in illegal activity without any participation in or direction from an organization that maintains traditional leadership positions and membership rosters. On another level, the above-ground public face, the political wing of a domestic terrorist movement, may focus on propaganda and the dissemination of ideology engaging in protected speech.
5. Prison Radicalization: Prison has been highlighted as an arena in which terrorist radicalization can occur. Some prison gangs delve into radical or extremist ideologies that motivate domestic terrorists, and in a number of instances, these ideologies are integral to fashioning cohesive group identities within prison walls. It must be reiterated, however, that even for gangs that exhibit these ideological dimensions, criminal enterprises such as drug trafficking, not radical beliefs, largely drive their activities.
