Vonortas, 1991 Attempts to combine theoretical and empirical analysis of cooperative industrial research and to treat this phenomenon as part of a more general process of industrial evolution Cooperative Research and Development: The Industry—University—Government Relationship Albert N. Link, Gregory Tasse, 2012-12-06 We must all hang together or surely we will all hang separately Benjamin Franklin The significant apathy that characterized relationships between industry and universities and the adversarial nature of relationships between industry and government have both faded rapidly in the 1980s as the realities of global competition have surfaced in the United States Both industry and government leaders articulate a number of constructs for regaining our competitiveness in world markets One of the more frequent strategies prescribed in this new competitiveness era is cooperation Different individuals or groups may espouse different definitions interpretations or areas of emphasis but the overall importance of this concept is substantial Although examples of cooperative research have existed for several decades the number and variety of relationships have expanded rapidly in the 1980s as corporations universities and governments have embraced this strategy Joint ventures involving two or three firms increased from under 200 per year in the 1970s to over 400 per year by the mid 1980s Multiple firm cooperative arrangements are a more recent phenomenon made possible by the National Cooperative Research Act of 1984 By mid 1988 81 of these industry level consortia had formed under the provisions of the 1984 Act The rapid growth in cooperative research and development R D is primarily a response to the pressures of international competition As a corporate strategy cooperative R D meets short term needs for assets to implement new approaches for coping with intensifying competition Cooperative Research for R & D-intensive
