Digital Detroit Jeff Rice, 2012-02-21 Since the 1967 riots that ripped apart the city Detroit has traditionally been viewed either as a place in ruins or a metropolis on the verge of rejuvenation In Digital Detroit Rhetoric and Space in the Age of the Network author Jeff Rice goes beyond the notion of Detroit as simply a city of two ideas Instead he explores the city as a web of multiple meanings which in the digital age come together in the city's spaces to form a network that shapes the writing the activity and the very thinking of those around it Rice focuses his study on four of Detroit's most iconic places Woodward Avenue the Maccabees Building Michigan Central Station and 8 Mile covering each in a separate chapter Each of these chapters explains one of the four features of network rhetoric folks on me the affective interface response and decision making As these rhetorical features connect they form the overall network called Digital Detroit Rice demonstrates how new media such as podcasts wikis blogs interactive maps and the Internet in general knit together Detroit into a digital network whose identity is fluid and ever changing In telling Detroit's spatial story Rice deftly illustrates how this new media as a rhetorical practice ultimately shapes understandings of space in ways that computer applications and city planning often cannot The result is a model for a new way of thinking and

Christine Nicometo,Ben McCorkle,Robert Atwan,2005 Resources for Teaching Convergence ,2002 Convergence ,1978 The Rhetoric of American Romance Evan Carton,1985

The formalistic application of the term romance to a species of nineteenth century narrative fiction fails to do justice to the range and concerns of American romance writers argues Evan Carton The Rhetoric of American Romance redefines romance as a self consciously dialectical enactment of critical and philosophic concerns about the relation of words to things and about the nature of the self For Evan Carton the distinctive features of the American romance are its rhetorical transgression of generic boundaries its exploration of the divide and its fabrication of connections between the real and the ideal and its ambivalent attitude toward the powers and limitations of language and imagination The book demonstrates its theoretical claims through new readings of Emerson Dickinson Poe and Hawthorne that are both independently convincing and mutually supportive From the works of these four writers Carton identifies the strategies and structures of romance in four different formal genres The essays poems and stories of Emerson Dickinson and Poe exemplify the predicament of romance which must imagine the highest reality but which in doing so cannot help but see its achievement as merely imaginary metaphorical and linguistic In the novelistic career of Hawthorne which Carton discusses most extensively these tensions culminate in The Marble Faun s exploration of the problem of a meaning in world where foundations conceptual moral architectural aesthetic have crumbled but where the models they have supported remain powerful In its paradoxical quest to locate the real by means of imagination and language the American romance expresses an epistemological dialectic that informs our culture As a creative mode that highlights the act of interpretation it suggestively embodies the problem of meaning in contemporary criticism Publisher s description
