Conversation For Action:

Conversations for Action and Collected Essays Fernando Flores, 2013-04-25 How do we create value for ourselves and others while at the same time participating in today's free market economy How do we produce results while at the same time developing relationships where we take care of each other in the process Today instead of productively and joyfully engaging with broad networks of people we are increasingly stressed by our working relationships With networked technology disconnecting is becoming increasingly more difficult In order to build productive and trusting relationships we must learn skills that will enable us to build trust coordinate our commitments more effectively listen to each other and build networks of commitments for the sake of producing value for ourselves for our families for the organizations in which we participate for our communities and for our world as a whole The essays in this collection offer a framework for developing more effective productive relationships in the workplace or in any context where a person must coordinate with others to make something happen The essays describe how to effectively make commitments that allow us to create something of value Describing Flores network of commitments conversations for action framework a framework that has been cited in more than three thousand books the author paints a vivid view of language as action rather than just words that transfer information from one place the speaker to another the listener When people engage in conversations commitments are made and spaces of possibilities are opened up Therefore the theme is of instilling a culture of commitment in our working relationships allowing us to focus on what we are creating of value together rather than the ongoing stress of attempting to calculate tradeoffs of individual interests Edited by Maria Flores Letelier it was Maria's mission to make available works that had rested as private papers in hard copy form only for twenty to thirty years She selected and edited a group of essays and placed them in an effective order for the reader

Conversation for Action Denise E. Murray, 1991-12-13 Today computer mediated communication spans a range of activities from interactive messages to word processing Researchers interested in this new technology have concentrated on its effects in the workplace for knowledge production and dissemination or on its word processing function The study reported here examines communication events in which the computer is the medium and views such computer mediated communication from the perspective of language use Its goal is to understand through data collected from an anthropological perspective the ways of communicating used by members of an established community of computer users In particular it answers the questions i How do computer communicators choose among the available media and modes of communication ii What are the basic and recurring discourse patterns across media and modes through which this community achieves its institutional goals of innovation and product development iii How do the answers to the previous two questions inform our understanding of language use in general
