

EXAMPLES OF DETACHING

with love

from an addicted or dysfunctional person

Emotional or psychological detachment:

- Focus on what you can control. Differentiate what's in your control and what isn't.
- Respond don't react. Take time to figure out what you want to say and say it when you're calm rather than being quick to react in the moment.
- Respond in a new way. For example, instead of taking it personally or being defensive, shrug off a rude comment or make a joke of it. This changes the dynamics of the interaction.
- Allow others to make their own (good or bad) decisions.
- Don't take responsibility for other people's behavior or the consequences of their choices.
- Don't give unsolicited advice or tell others what they should do.
- Don't obsess about other people's problems.
- Don't work harder to solve their problems than they are.
- Set emotional boundaries by letting others know how to treat you.
- Be sure your expectations are realistic. Unrealistic expectations are often a source of frustration and resentment.
- Do something for yourself. Notice what you need right now and try to give it to yourself.

married to alcoholics Here Zajdow details and explores the lives of such women who belong to Al Anon where they may share their experiences and offer their stories in a nonthreatening and supportive environment The author presents the narratives of these women in the context of her analysis of the self help group to demonstrate how people construct and reconstruct their lives as coherent stories about themselves and to show how these self stories can be changed and reconceptualized within the context of the group Unique in its examination of self stories offered within a self help group this book challenges sociological knowledge about the way these mutual aid groups operate as communities of interest and help Zajdow begins by laying the groundwork through a discussion of the professional and lay discourses on women s relationships to alcoholic men She then provides the basis for using self stories to examine a group of people the individuals in the group and the behavior of the group in general A history of Al Anon as a self help group is also detailed and the author compares the Australian meetings to meetings in other parts of the world The stories themselves are then examined and discussed in terms of how they relate to group processes and individual change through Al Anon Tracing the way that these women move from a place of despair to one of hope and meaningful change this also represents a sociological exploration of gender families and communities
