Doing Our Homework Andrea B. Bermúdez, 1994 Recognizing the failure of American schools to educate Hispanic and other minority students educators are searching for new strategies and discovering the powerful role that parents can play in advancing educational goals A growing body of evidence supports the belief that involving parents in their children's education works in the best interests of students schools and parents themselves However despite recent legislative support few schools are involving parents in meaningful ways Barriers that block collaboration between Hispanic parents and school personnel include work interference low parent self confidence limited English proficiency cultural differences and teacher and administrator attitudes Parent involvement encompasses a variety of patterns focused on home school or community Successful school interventions to promote parent involvement include strategies that are social informational educational supportive of the home or leadership oriented Appropriate training helps both teachers and parents establish an effective home school communication network Such programs train teachers to train parents and to learn from parents and provide parents with an awareness of school practices and resources and the skills to support student learning at home A successful four way collaboration among Hispanic parents university trainers local businesses and school district personnel is described that demonstrates ways to promote community support An appendix outlines a model of integrated parent and teacher training within an inservice curriculum Contains 129 references SV Resources in Education ,1994-11 Multicultural Counseling in Schools Paul Pedersen, John C.
