Doing Their Share To Save The Planet:

Wild Things Sidney I. Dobrin, Kenneth B. Kidd, 2004 Today's children are occupied with activities taking place in settings that are isolated from nature or are simulations of the earth's natural environment. This text examines the ways in which literature, media, and other cultural forms for young people address nature, place, and ecology.

Doing Their Share to Save the Planet Donna Lee King, 1995 What do American children see as the biggest threat to their future? Not superpowers and corporate greed, but rather litterbugs and water wasters. The fear is a reasonable one, yet it is also one that is forced on children from every side. They are targeted for messages about the environmental crisis by schools, television programs, T-shirts, green comics on milk cartons, and cereal boxes. Through interviewing children and conducting a fascinating analysis of their drawings and the reactions of kids to Captain Planet, a popular television cartoon for kids, Donna Lee King makes it clear that children are taking the warnings to heart and rapidly becoming part of a new generation of environmentalists. King offers a unique view of the world's environmental problems through the eyes of our children and goes on to ask who seeks to influence the kids and why. She argues that the children, like their parents, are being distracted from the deeper causes of the environmental crisis and from the effort it will take to solve it. This book will also help parents understand children's hopes and fears for the future.

Magazine Advertising in Life during World War II Monica Brasted, 2018-03-01 Magazine Advertising in Life during World War II Patriotism through Service Thrift and Utility is a descriptive analysis that examines how the cultural values of service, thrift, and utility were framed in advertisements in Life magazine from 1942 to 1945. These cultural values were used by advertisers to create citizen consumers who practiced frugal consumption of advertised products and services to demonstrate their patriotism and fulfill their perceived civic duties. Patriotism through service, thrift, and utility was not limited to citizen consumers but was also used in the advertisements to highlight the contributions of manufacturers to the total war effort. The advertisements were able to support the war and reinforce the American way of life and its consumer culture by framing service, thrift, and utility in relation to patriotism and consumption. Recommended for scholars of media studies, cultural studies, communication, advertising history, and women's studies.
