Decision Making For Consumers:

Understanding Consumer Decision Making Thomas J. Reynolds, Jerry C. Olson, 2001-05 This edited volume will help business and academic researchers understand the means end approach to understanding consumers This is a qualitative marketing research method to gain customer insight into decision making Consumer Behavior and Managerial Decision Making Frank R. Kardes, 2002 This scientific sophisticated yet readable book approaches the subject of consumer behavior by using a rigorous scientific orientation and presenting material in three overlapping sections basic concepts persuasion and managerial decision making It discusses the principles and scientific investigation of consumer behavior and demonstrates how companies and organizations use them strategically every day Chapter topics include consumer attention and comprehension consumer memory judgment and choice the message learning approach to persuasion affective and motivational approaches to persuasion self persuasion and social influence principles online consumer behavior new product development product management and strategies for improving managerial decision making For individuals concerned with the attitudes and activities of today s buyer in the marketplace Consumer Behavior Charles Glenn Walters, Blaise J. Bergiel, 1989 Buyer Behavior Raymond L. Horton, 1984 Decision-making for Consumers E. Scott Maynes, 1976

Buyology Reshan Perera, 2020-02 In simple wording buy ology means the study of consumer buying patterns Consumer decision making is a process which marketer must be able to understand When studying about the consumer behaviour individuals or situational levels use attempt in drawing particular generalisations Consumer Decision Making G. R. Foxall, 1993 Consumer Behavior I Margaret Hogg, 2005-09-07 This landmark work contains classic and contemporary writings including the most widely cited and influential papers that examine consumer behavior as a field of study The first volume addresses the question how do we study consumers and provides the theoretical and historical context for the debates about consumer behavior research captured in the following volumes The second volume examines consumer decision making and the third volume examines consumer socialization concentrating particularly on studies of childhood children and family consumer behavior Differences in Consumers' Decision-making Styles Across Product Categories with Varying Complexity Shayna Lee Olyott, 2018 Researchers in consumer behaviour agree that consumers purchasing behaviour is influenced by a variety of factors including but not limited to personal or individual characteristics such as personality attitudes knowledge and motivation and external factors such as social situational or contextual factors as well as marketing related and market related factors These factors influence consumersa 22 4 decisions in terms of what where and why they purchase certain products and also how consumers behave and react in the marketplace more specifically pertaining to their application of specific consumer decision making styles when purchasing products Most researchers in consumer behaviour concur that consumersa 22 4 purchasing decisions can be arranged along a continuum of complexity ranging from extended and in depth decision making through to low involvement routine decision making The aim of this study was to determine and describe demographic differences in consumers' predominant decision making styles in the South African context and subsequently to ascertain how the predominant decision making styles of specific demographic subsets of the population are similar or differ across selected product categories varying in complexity namely major household appliances clothing workwear or best daywear and groceries A survey research design was implemented using a structured self administered questionnaire to measure consumers' decision making styles with an adapted version of Sproles and Kendall's 1986 consumer style inventory CSI across the three product categories Through the EFA procedure the data pertaining to consumers' decision making styles CDMS was reduced to between 18 and 28 items per product category which were distributed amongst five factors for each product category Of the five factors three factors showed similar results across the product categories in terms of item content namely the perfectionist the confused by over choice and the heuristic decision making styles The perfectionism CDMS was identified as the most pertinent fairly strong the heuristics CDMS was the second most pertinent and the confused by over choice CDMS was the least pertinent across the three product categories More specifically the results showed that consumers were fairly perfectionistic in their CDMS when purchasing major household appliances and clothing These consumers were also concerned about value for money when it came to groceries and major household appliances Overall the confused by over choice CDMS was the least prevalent across the product categories It appears that the confused by over choice CDMS is dependent on the product category as consumers were more prone to apply a consumer decision style that epitomises confusion when purchasing major appliances than when purchasing clothing and groceries The MANOVA indicated that across all three of the product categories consumers with a low level of educational attainment and Millennials were respectively more likely to apply the confused by over choice or the heuristic CDMS which both suggest a lack of rationality This is of concern in terms of informed consumer decisions In addition specific consumer decision making styles were more prominent for certain product categories and among consumers with specific demographic characteristics The study makes a valuable contribution towards the literature and also for consideration by marketers brand managers and retailers of appliances clothing and groceries

Consumer Decision Making Canada. Consumer Research and Evaluation Branch, Michel Zins, 1979

A Purchase Decision-making Process Model of Online Consumers and Its Influential Factor Sahar Karimi, 2013 This research explores the online purchase decision making behaviour of consumers by introducing a comprehensive approach that covers two different viewpoints a individual level behaviour and b market level behaviour Individual level behaviour enhances our understanding of how purchase decision making processes unfold and whether they differ for different individuals Drawing from decision analysis and consumer behaviour literature four segments of online consumers are introduced based on two individual factors decision making style and knowledge of the product Archetypal behaviour of each segment is identified addressing variations in the process and process outcome for different groups In addition market level behaviour investigates the actual behaviour of consumers in relation with different retailers in the market it is based on the aggregated behaviour of 60 000 individuals Not only behaviour in a particular website but also cross visiting behaviour of consumers comparing multiple retailers is examined For this purpose a multi level mixed method approach is designed Video recording sessions think aloud method interviews and questionnaires are used to capture the dynamic decision making process segment consumers and measure the outcome of the process at individual level Business process modeling approach and an adaptation of path configuration method are selected for modelling the process Data from an Internet panel data provider comScore is analyzed to explore the market behaviour of consumers visiting multiple retailers A set of measurement frameworks that have been developed to fully exploit the research potential of Internet panel data are designed for this research Two sectors of banking and mobile network providers are selected this research methodology enables a much more detailed evaluation of online behaviour and can be applied in other consumer markets A conceptual model of online purchase decision making is proposed synthesizing theory from three disciplines consumer behaviour decision analysis and Information Systems This model is able to explain the complexities and dynamic nature of real life decision making processes The results of individual level analysis show that the synthesized model has an enhanced descriptive power Purchase decision making processes in the two sectors appear to be highly complex with a large number of iterations being more unstructured in banking sector The process is found to be influenced by the both individual characteristics and each segment exhibits a certain typology of behaviour Behaviour in terms of the way stages are performed is identical across the two sectors whereas it differs in relation to intensity of decision making cycles duration of the process and the process outcome being a function of product market characteristics The findings of market level analysis revealed that banking websites are preliminary visited for using online banking services despite the high portion of visitors the intensity of research in these websites is low On the contrary mobile network providers attract a higher portion of consumers with purchase intentions and enjoy more intensive research Consumers have a small consideration set in both sectors and consider certain banks providers rather than using the accessibility of all alternative on the Internet It is evident that comparison sites play an important role in both markets affecting the behaviour of online consumers Finally the research stresses the use of the Internet as a complementary channel offering specific benefits in each sector

Consumer Decision-making Margaret K. Hogg, 2006 Consumer Behavior Leon G. Schiffman, Leslie Lazar Kanuk, 1991 With a strong empirical and market segmentation approach this book focuses on how the Internet has changed the way people obtain information about potential purchases giving readers the most up to date material on how technology is changing their lives as consumers The Thirty two mini cases help readers learn by applying the theory drawing on current business news to demonstrate specific consumer behavior concepts This edition now includes thirty two Active Learning mini cases A clear consumer decision making model is set out in each chapter to facilitate learning presented in the first chapter this model serves as a structural framework for the concepts the building blocks examined in the following chapters The book s final chapter ties all of these concepts together so readers see the interrelationships and relevance of individual concepts to consumer decision making For those studying consumer behavior and or marketing
