

An Experimental Approach to Dreams and Telepathy: II. Report of Three Studies

BY MORTAULT ULLMAN, M.D. AND STANLEY KRIPPNER, PH.D.

Three studies were designed to investigate telepathic effects in REM sleep. On each night a target (art print) was randomly selected by an agent who spent the night in a distant room attempting to telepathically influence the subject's dreams, which were monitored by EEG techniques and tape recorded. Typed transcripts were sent to outside judges for blind comparisons with the targets. For each study, the ratings given the actual target-transcript combinations were significantly higher than those given the incorrect target-transcript combinations.

INTEREST in the possible occurrence of telepathy in dreams moved from an anecdotal level (spontaneous reports of dreams purporting to detect actual events simultaneously occurring unknown to and at a distance from the dreamer) to a clinical level when reports of presumptively telepathic dreams of patients occurring in the context of the therapeutic situation began to appear in the psychiatric literature. This began in Freud's own writings and has clustered in publications appearing in the past two decades.⁽¹⁾

With the development of electrophysiological techniques for monitoring of dreaming during the total period of sleep it became possible for the first time to attempt a dream study in a way that freed the experimenter from a precarious reliance upon spontaneous recall. In its application to the study of the telepathic dream it became possible for the first time to transcend the limitations of the clinical approach and to introduce into the experimental design a number of factors. These included quantification (i.e., having a designated number of subjects spend a certain number of nights in the laboratory; control of variables relating to the type of target material one is trying to "send"; specification of the conditions under which the "reading" occurs (i.e., isolating the "reader" or agent from the subject; and random selection of the target picture). It was also possible to have independent judges (i.e., having outside judges who know nothing about the order in which the target pictures are chosen for a series of experimental nights attempt to both rank and rate their judgments as to which target comes closest to the material described in the transcribed record of the subject's dreams for a given night. Finally, appropriate statistical techniques for evaluating the results of the judging process were developed.

Following an earlier report⁽²⁾ describing exploratory studies utilizing the application of the REM monitoring technique to the study of the telepathic dream, our laboratory has engaged in a number of follow-up studies involving repeated nights with a selected subject. Three of these studies will be summarized.

First Study

The first experimental series to utilize a single subject was completed in 1964. The subject, a New York psychologist selected on the basis of his performance in a preliminary screening study, was paired with a staff psychologist working in the laboratory. The main hypothetical formulation Psychic phenomena recorded throughout human history remained a mystery or a matter of faith rather than a subject of serious study until scientists began to investigate them roughly a century and a half ago. Systematic experimentation began with the work of J. B. Rhine at Duke University resulting in the publication of Extra Sensory Perception 1934 followed by Extra Sensory Perception After Sixty Years 1940. Rhine and researchers who came after him struggled to present sufficient evidence to gain scientific credibility for the existence of extrasensory abilities. Yet despite tight experimental controls and numerous significant results the subject remains controversial. Parapsychologists argue that the impasse is not due to a lack of evidence but to the challenge their claims pose to the worldview of science in general. This comprehensive overview of the discipline of parapsychology written by one of its most notable investigators offers the reader a full understanding of both its concepts, theories and methods and its controversies, problems and prospects.

Debating Psychic Experience Stanley Krippner, Harris L. Friedman, 2010-09-02. This book presents a provocative debate between parapsychological advocates who claim that Western science's worldview is incomplete and counteradvocates who insist that parapsychological data is either spurious or can be explained by standard scientific principles. Despite ongoing and repeated attempts to prove or disprove the existence of parapsychological events there are still no conclusive findings and certainly no consensus across the worldwide community of scholars, scientists and proponents of psychic phenomena. Still there is no shortage of information about this fascinating topic to allow everyone to draw their own conclusions. This book has been expressly written to make each chapter and topic accessible to a general audience despite containing a vast amount of theoretical material. The book is organized into two parts: in the first section proponents of the validity of parapsychological data and critics who reject that validity state their respective positions. In the second part each group responds to each other's statements in the form of a debate. Other experts from the United States as well as from Australia and Great Britain provide overviews and conclusions.

This new text is a state of the art collection of essays representing varying points of view about dreams and the major research conducted in dream therapy today. Renewed interest into serious dream investigation in recent years has supplied a variety of conceptual and research applications into dream study. The essays in this volume 9 of a series inform readers of the present status of leading issues in parapsychology or psi research. The authors are experts in their fields and have written in a reader friendly way that captures the complexity and importance of their topics. Each essay comprehensively reviews a controversial topic.
