Dominant Battlespace Knowledge:

Dominant Battlespace Knowledge Stuart E. Johnson, Martin C. Libicki, 2020-11-19 The Department of Defense has been successfully exploiting rapidly developing advances in information technology for military gain On tomorrow's multidimensional battlefield or battlespace the increased density acuity and connectivity of sensors and many other information devices may allow U S Armed Forces to see almost everything worth seeing in real or near real time Such enhanced vision of the battlespace is no doubt a significant military advantage but a question remains How do we achieve dominant battlefield knowledge namely the ability to understand we see and act on it decisively The papers collected here address the most critical aspects of that problem to wit If the United States develops the means to acquire dominant battlespace knowledge DBK how might that affect the way it goes to war the circumstances under which force can and will be used the purposes for its employment and the resulting alterations of the global geomilitary environment Of particular interest is how the authors view the influence of DBK in light of the shift from global to regional stability issues that marks the post Cold War world While no definitive answer has yet emerged it is clear that the implications of so profound a change in military technology are critical to the structure and function of the U S Armed Forces In working toward a definitive answer the authors of this volume make an important contribution to a debate whose resolution will shape the decades to come

Dominant Battlespace Knowledge: Considerations for the Commander Robert McMurry, Naval War College (U.S.), 1998 The information age and an accompanying revolution in military affairs has the potential to provide U S forces with dominant battlespace knowledge resulting from information superiority While the benefits to the commander would be significant the development of relative superiority in situational awareness will not go unnoticed by the enemy While it may provide advantageous deterrent and coercive capabilities dominant battlespace knowledge will not necessarily prevent hostilities Commanders should expect the enemy to pursue asymmetric strategies including insurgencies terrorism and the use of weapons of mass destruction to overcome the technological advantage of the United States At the same time the enemy may introduce technology into his own forces to improve his situation awareness and precision engagement capabilities The end result of technological advances of both sides may be increased weapons lethality and increased involvement in prolonged conflicts and military operations other than war Dominant battlespace knowledge will also create challenges to conventional military leadership The goal of dominant battlespace knowledge is to lift the fog of war While the commander's understanding of the battle situation may improve the existence of dominant battlespace knowledge will create new and complex challenges

Finding the Target Frederick W. Kagan, 2010-05-14 In Finding the Target Frederick W Kagan describes the three basic transformations within the U S military since Vietnam First was the move to an all volunteer force and a new generation of weapons systems in the 1970s Second was the emergence of stealth technology and precision guided munitions in the 1980s Third was the information technology that followed the fall of the Soviet Union and the first Gulf War This last could have insured the U S continuing military preeminence but this goal was compromised by Clinton s drawing down of our armed forces in the 1990s and Bush s response to 9 11 and the global war on terror The issue of transformation leads Kagan to Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld s vision of a new military the conduct of the Iraq and Afghanistan wars and the disconnect between grand strategic visions such as the Bush Doctrine s idea of preemption and the underfunding of military force structures that are supposed to achieve such goals
