Cadmium in the Environment Lars Friberg,2017-12-08 The focus of this report is upon information essential to the understanding of the toxic action of cadmium and the relationship between dose exposure and effects on human beings and animals The therapy of cadmium poisoning has not been discussed This review on cadmium in the environment has been performed under a contract between the U S Environmental Protection Agency and the Department of Environmental Hygiene of the Karolinska Institute Sweden The report is intended to serve as a background paper for a future Air Quality Criteria document on cadmium Therefore particular attention has been given to information relevant for the evaluation of risks due to long term exposure to low concentrations of cadmium Acute effects from short term exposure to high concentrations are dealt with briefly In vitro studies without bearing on the main problem have not been dealt with The report is not limited to effects from exposure via inhalation Newly accessible information showing that large populations may be exposed considerably via the oral route can elucidate chronic effects of cadmium in general Man and animals can be victims of secondary exposure through vehicles such as food and water which have been contaminated by cadmium in air

Herber,Lorenzo Alessio,International Agency for Research on Cancer,1992 Cadmium is widely dispersed in the environment Human exposure to low levels occur as a result of natural processes as well as human activities such as mining smelting fossil fuel combustion and industrial use Pollution of the general environment by cadmium has as yet only been related to the development of human disease in some special situations such as itai itai disease and renal dysfunction in Belgium and in China However the possibility of more widespread contamination and greater mobility of cadmium in the environment on the one hand and the advent of new data concerning the carcinogenicity of cadmium on the other make this review of the state of the art in human risk identification and assessment timely Recent studies on human exposure to cadmium metabolism and toxicology renal dysfunction and related effects and experimental and epidemiological evidence for carcinogenicity of cadmium are described

Scoullou,Gerrit H. Vonkeman,I. Thornton,Z. Makuch,2012-12-06 Although this is a handbook for policy and regulation the major part of it is filled with data on the three heavy metals that served as examples mercury cadmium and lead Their stocks productions prices trade flows uses and applications recovery and recycling as well as their eco toxicological characteristics have been collected and presented to their fullest extent In addition they are thoroughly analysed for consistency future developments and trends and of course their consequences for sustainable development and future policy and regulation The second part on policy and regulation begins with an extensive and fundamental consideration on the characteristics of a sustainable heavy metals policy whereby innovative policy tools are developed In many aspects these considerations are also valid for other metals and even non metallic persistent substances Addressing the European Union in particular its policy making structure and practice are critically analysed in order to develop feasible and viable guidelines for long medium and short term EU policy measures The results of this exercise are then applied to the three heavy metals In each of these three chapters all existing EU measures are presented in detail and confronted with better practices elsewhere resulting in many suggestions and recommendations for the future In the last chapter the main conclusions and recommendations are carefully summarised Together with a very extended table of contents this makes the book easily accessible in spite of its volume This Handbook is a must for policy makers and administrators at all levels as well as for their counterparts in a wide variety of industries In addition it is well suited for environmental science courses at academic or higher professional level
