Damages For Nonpecuniary Loss In A Comparative Perspective:

Damages for non-pecuniary loss in a comparative perspective Ewa Bagińska, 2001 Damages for Non-Pecuniary Loss in a Comparative Perspective W.V. Horton Rogers, 2001-10-12

Damages for non-pecuniary loss are the subject of widespread interest in Europe. They were chosen as one of the initial projects of the Centre for Tort and Insurance Law Vienna. The Centre is by no means the first in the field in examining this topic but our exercise has sought to place the problem in the broader framework of the various legal systems and to go beyond the usual context of personal injury by accident. The comparative report is mainly based upon information supplied by colleagues in 10 European countries. The working method was a questionnaire issued in the summer of 1999 on the basis of which there were ten detailed country reports which are republished in this volume. However, information has also been included from Portugal, South Africa, Sweden, the United States and Israel. The Israeli report is also published in an appendix in this volume. Colleagues from those countries supplied material during an exercise in 1999 by the European Group on Tort Law on the law of damages in general, directed by Professor Ulrich Magnus, report forthcoming. A preliminary comparative report was made to a meeting in Munich on 28 and 29 April 2000 attended by persons who had supplied country reports, other members of the European Group on Tort Law and by representatives of Munich Re Insurance who have supported the Centre and shown a close interest in this project. A draft final report was presented at a symposium in Munich on 13 October 2000 hosted by Munich Re and attended by lawyers and insurers from a wider range of European countries. Dr Stefan Heyd of Munich Re and Professor Pierre Tercier of the University of Fribourg also addressed the symposium and their contributions are included in this volume, see XII and Appendix 2. The final comparative report owes much to the discussions at both the meetings in Munich. Finally, we express our gratitude for the most valuable help of Dr Sabine Gantner, Donna Stockenhuber, M. A. and Dr Friedrich Popp in preparing the manuscript for the publisher. 2 W. V. H. Rogers, December 2000. I See in particular the book of Pfennigstorff and of McIntosh and Holmes on personal injury damages in Europe and the work for the European Parliament of the Group coordinated by Prof. Busnelli of Pisa, who has contributed to this volume. 2 The law moves on. Since the material was submitted for press, there have been expansive movements in England on privacy and exemplary damages. No doubt other systems have also seen changes. But law books are inevitably snapshots. Table of Contents. Welcome Speech from the Damages for Non-Pecuniary Loss in Europe Meeting. S. Heyd. XIII Questionnaire. XV List of Contributors. the European Court of Human Rights now provides a sufficient reason for national lawmakers to rethink their concept of non pecuniary damage. The fact remains that the ECtHR in its case law finds a breach of a fundamental right and remedies that breach whereas the national law of damages affords the possibility of awarding compensation for non pecuniary loss if the aggrieved party is injured. A conflict results on the European level a rights based approach is applied and on the national level a damage injury based approach prevails. In this article we advocate a change in the national law of damages in order to ensure that the law of damages remains durable and consistent when confronted with judgments of the ECtHR we advocate accepting and incorporating a rights based approach. The clash between European human rights law and the national law of damages is clearly expressed in the different approaches regarding bereavement damage. Under Dutch law a proposal aimed at introducing a legal basis for compensation for this type of loss was rejected a few years ago whereas the ECtHR starting from its rights based approach has found that compensation for non pecuniary loss should be available as part of the range of redress mechanisms when a government body has infringed a family member's right to life. An specific argument in the Dutch discussion i.e. the moral aversion towards compensating and determining grief and suffering can be overcome by not making a link with grief and suffering but instead taking one's legal position as a starting point e.g. the breach of the right to life. A rights based approach not only supports the idea that any rights infringed should be remedied but also implies a moral dismissal.
