Fears of university bias against fee-paying schools

By Louise Charnock-Smith

THE heads of Britain's private schools have said "schools should be ringfenced" from public schools to avoid bias against fee-paying schools. The heads of 100 private schools in England and Wales have signed a letter to the Department of Education, saying that schools should be "ringfenced" from public schools to avoid bias against fee-paying schools.

Writing to The Telegraph, Mr Butler said there was a "significant risk" of bias against fee-paying schools in the selection process for university places. He said: "It may be argued that, in the current climate, it is not possible to avoid such bias. But it is not necessary to do so. It is possible to ensure that every school is given the same chance of getting the best results."

Mr Butler said that the "ringfencing" of private schools was a "necessary step" to ensure that every school is given the same chance of getting the best results. He said: "It is not possible to avoid such bias. But it is not necessary to do so. It is possible to ensure that every school is given the same chance of getting the best results."

Other universities for decades have been accused of favouring public schools. Some have said that public schools are "ringfenced" from public schools to avoid bias against fee-paying schools.

Mr Butler said that the "ringfencing" of private schools was a "necessary step" to ensure that every school is given the same chance of getting the best results. He said: "It is not possible to avoid such bias. But it is not necessary to do so. It is possible to ensure that every school is given the same chance of getting the best results."

Pugh: Body-shaming nearly killed my career

Patsy Pugh, who has been a model for over 30 years, says that body-shaming nearly killed her career. She said: "It was a very difficult time for me. I was being told that I was too old, too fat, and too ugly. But I knew that I was a professional and I was going to keep going."

Windfall tax on banks will make City 'less competitive'

By Tim Wallace and Patrick Wintfield

THE City of London will lose out to its competitors if a windfall tax on banks is introduced, according to a report by the City of London Corporation. The report says that the tax will make the City "less competitive" and will lead to a loss of jobs and revenue.

Mr Pugh said that the "ringfencing" of private schools was a "necessary step" to ensure that every school is given the same chance of getting the best results. He said: "It is not possible to avoid such bias. But it is not necessary to do so. It is possible to ensure that every school is given the same chance of getting the best results."
