Frank Lloyd Wright's Gilded-age Mansion Rachel Ramsey Brubaker, 2016 The Dana Thomas House in Springfield Illinois designed and constructed between 1902 and 1904 for heiress Susan Lawrence Dana has been studied only as an expression of Frank Lloyd Wright s prairie house philosophy However it actually straddles two distinct traditions that of the Gilded Age mansions which mimicked the palaces of aristocratic Europeans and that of twentieth century progressive architecture which placed aesthetic innovation as paramount This paper considers the work of Frank Lloyd Wright as not only looking forward to modern architecture but as partially conforming to the entertainment based spatial organization and decidedly public purpose of nineteenth century millionaire s mansions No one has yet compared Wright to this tradition His atypically grandiose design for Susan Lawrence Dana with its cavernous entertainment spaces and commanding grand entrance was the tool that allowed Dana to firmly establish herself in Springfield progressive politics

Entirely Wright Blair Kamin, 1990 Susan Lawrence Roberta Volkmann, 2011 In 1902 Susan Lawrence commissioned Frank Lloyd Wright to remodel her deceased father s home in Springfield Illinois The project grew and became a blonde Roman brick mansion with 35 rooms on 16 different levels An anomaly in Springfield the house is a masterpiece that still stands today as one of Wright s finest Prairie designs Now called the Dana Thomas House it is an Illinois State Historic Site that has been visited by thousands The woman behind the project Susan Lawrence lived during a period in history when women were finding their voices and carving out new places in society As the world changed around her she assumed several names and played many roles She entertained lavishly traveled the world championed the rights of women and African Americans shared her time and money and led seekers of spiritual truths With over 50 images this book captures Susan Lawrence s complex and independent lifestyle that matched the home Frank Lloyd Wright designed for her unconventional and dramatic Frank Lloyd Wright and Susan Lawrence Dana Richard S.
