

spoke away thereby, and therefore, that he should now be pleased to advise them well, how unseasonable this grant or consent of his should be: first, to his Majesty for so many of his subjects, next to the Adventurers, and lastly, what an imputation and injury it might be, to both their some proper reputations, and likewise, having each of them authorities in their places, to compel the adventures and irregular mutinies, at any time, to what should be obedient and honest, which if they should not execute, the blame would not lie upon the people (as at times wandering and insubordinate) but upon themselves for weakly and unworship to their command. And moreover treated him by my secret practices to apprehend them, first that the obstinate, and precipitate many, were no more in such a condition and state to be favoured, then the murmuring and mutinous of such Rebellious and turbulent Humourists, who had not sufficient knowledge, to do as in the yoke of goodness, and in the business for which they were first out of England, for which likewise, at the expense and charge of the Adventurers, they were to be committed, and that the means in the whole first sent the Company in no less than twenty pounds, for his some personal Transplantation, and things necessary to accompany him. And therefore lovingly censured Sir George, by the merchandise of his (Barrenness) well maintained reputation, and by the power of his own consent, and by the virtue of their ancient love and friendship, which had, these many years been joined between them, to do his best, to give this revolved Company (if he could find some them) the consideration of these particulars, and so work with them (if he might) that by faire means (the Admirer conceived) they would at length surmount their some errors, which he would be as ready, upon their mending and coming into par-don, as he did now punish them, affecting them in general and particular, that whatsoever they had formerly committed, or practised before against the Lawes of Gods and Kinges, should not in any sort be imputed against them.

In which good Office Sir George Summers did so nobly worker, and heartily labour, as he brought most of them in, and indeed all, but Christopher Carter, and Robert Watney, who (by no means) would any more come amongst Sir Georges men; hearing that Sir George had commanded his men indeed (since they would not be interested by faire means) to surprise them (if they could) by any device or force. From which time they grew so cautious and wary, for their own sake, as at our coming away, were were faine to leave them behind. That Watney was Saylor, who at his first landing upon the Island (as after you shall heare) killed another fellow Saylor of his, the bodies of the murdered and Murderer so dwelling, as perished together.

During our time of abode upon these Islands, wee had daily every Sunday two Sermons preached by our Minister, besides every Morning and Evening at the ringing of a Bell, we were all to publique Prayer, at what time the names of our whole Company were called by Name, such as were wanting, were duly punished.

The contents (for the most part) of all our Preachers Sermons, were especially of Thankfulnesse and Unity, &c.

It pleased God also to give us opportunitee, to performe all the other Offices, and Rites of our Christian Profession in this Island: as Marriage, for the five and twentieth of November we had one of Sir George Summers his men, his Cooke, named Thomas Prouell, who married a Maid Servant of one Mistress Hervey, whose name was Elizabeth Prouell: and upon Christmas Eve, as also once before, the first of October, our Minister preached a goodly Sermon, which being ended, he celebrated a Communion, at the partaking whereof our Gouernour was, and the greatest part of our Company: and the eleventh of February, wee had the child of one John Left christened a Daughter, to which Captaine Newport and my selfe were Witnesses, and the first of one Mistress Hervey and we named it Bermuda, as also the five and twentieth of March, the wife of one Edward Easton, being delivered the weeke before of a Boy, had him then christened, to which Captaine Newport and my selfe, and Master James Sayle were Godfathers, and we named it Bermuda.

Likewise, we buried five of our company, Jeffrey Briers, Richard Lewis, William Hickman, and my God-daughter Bermuda Easton, and one violently Edward Samuel a Saylor, being violently killed by the forsaide Robert Watney, (a Saylor likewise) with a Shocall, who strake him therewith under the life of the Eare, for which he was apprehended, and appointed to be hanged the next day, the first being done in the twilight but being bound fast to a Tree all night, with many Ropes, and a Guard of five or six to attend him, his fellow Saylor watching the advantage of the Centinels sleeping) in despite and disdain that Justice should be shewed upon a Saylor, and that one of their crew should be an example to others, not taking into consideration, the remembrance of the murder, nor the horror of the Sinne, they cut his bands, and conveyed him into the Woods, where they fed him nightly, and closely, who afterward by the mediation of Sir George Summers, upon many conditions, had his tryall respited by our Gouernour.

Wee had brought our Pinnace forward by this time, as the eight and twentieth of April we having laid her Keels. The five and twentieth of February, we now began to take old Cables we had prepared unto us, which afforded Oats enough: and one barrell of Pease, and another of Tare, we likewise used, which fired our vision little way upon the Ship, we beamed her otherwise with Lime made of Walke-shells, and an hard white stone which we had
