

INDUSTRIALIZATION AND URBAN TRANSFORMATION

CONCLUSIONS

- This study first aimed to momentarily concentrate on the revolutionary process of industrialization and its effect on the development of cities to give areas of strength for the conversation about the idea of urban regeneration.
- It examined how ecological, social, and monetary examples of cities changed after the development of industrialization.
- Decentralized industrial facilities may also lead to urban decay in the city.
- This research explained that industrialization is a major activity that transforms the urban structure of cities and improper and unmanaged industrial placement make serious damage to cities.
- So sustainable urban restoration is a key function to installing effective industrial facilities in the city without economic downfall and environmental degradation
