customer service workers sitting at their desks right now picking up phones and responding to messages They are helping people like you and hundreds of millions of others every day when something gets broken or when something doesn't work. However, their jobs are in danger and yours could be too. They could be largely replaced by computer automation. With the rapid growth of Artificial Intelligence capabilities, connected products, and virtual reality, we will see a change in the customer service industry in the upcoming decade that we haven't seen before. Moreover, in just about 30 years, computers may reach and quickly surpass the general human intelligence. And then what? This book is for everyone who is curious about these developments and how it will affect everyone's job.

Customer Service in the Transhuman Age We'll soon be celebrating the arrival of the 21st year of the 21st century, and technology plays a larger role in our lives than ever. In the upcoming decades, humans will gain abilities previously associated only with gods, or in other words, they will become transhuman. As a result, companies will need to fundamentally change their approach to customer service in order to develop new revenue opportunities and strengthen market position.

Customer Service in the Transhuman Age explores the development of transhumanism and how it could improve the way we do customer service. You'll find practical advice for moving customer service into the future, starting today. Customer Service Expert Level Full Certification Kit - Complete Skills, Training, and Support Steps to the Best Customer Experience by Redefining and Improving Customer Experience Ivanka Menken, Tess Wheelwright, 2009 This Customer Service Expert Level Certification Kit builds on the knowledge and understanding of and looking at the essential skills and qualities required by Customer Service supervisors and managers. More than six out of ten people employed in customer facing sales and service roles say that their manager's behavior towards them affects the level of customer service they deliver. The behavior of line management has a direct impact on the quality of service and brand experience that is extended to customers. Over three out of ten claim that the relationship with their manager always impacted upon the customer experience they deliver. The relationship between managers and their teams is so bad that one in ten customer-facing workers consider it to be the biggest threat to their job security as big a worry as the possibility of their jobs being outsourced. There's a host of indications that line managers are not fulfilling their responsibilities towards their teams. In short, managers are not managing. The extent to which managers are reneging on their responsibilities is illustrated by the fact that four out of ten managers communicate with their teams for just 30 minutes or less in an average day. Just over half of managers were found to converse with their teams for an hour a day or less. Given the apparent general lack of communication between manager and team, is it any wonder that the common perception of frontline workers is of individuals ill-equipped to resolve customer issues and unable to effectively communicate an organization's products, services and brand values. More often than not, Customer Service Supervisors and Managers have been promoted up the chain of command and began in an entry-level Customer Service position. Too rarely does this promotion come with corresponding training and support to ensure our supervisors and managers are equipped to deal with their new role. It is time for a change.
