

DECOMMISSIONING HEALTH PHYSICS

Richard C. Ewing, Editor, Health Physics Society, University of Wisconsin

Editorial Comment

As the Health Physics Society (HPS) enters its 40th year, it is time to take a look at the Society's history and to consider the future of the Society. The HPS was founded in 1952, and since that time it has grown from a small group of individuals to a large, international organization. The Society has been successful in many ways, and it has played a significant role in the development of the health physics profession. However, there are some challenges that the Society faces today, and it is important to consider how the Society can best address these challenges in the future.

One of the challenges that the Society faces is the changing nature of the health physics profession. In the past, health physics was primarily concerned with the protection of workers and the public from the hazards of ionizing radiation. However, in recent years, there has been a shift in the focus of the profession, with more emphasis on the protection of the environment and the development of new technologies for the peaceful use of nuclear energy. This shift has led to the development of new subfields within the profession, such as environmental health physics and nuclear medicine physics. The Society must adapt to these changes in order to remain relevant and effective in the future.

Nuclear Decommissioning, Waste Management, and Environmental Site Remediation Colin Bayliss, Kevin Langley, 2003-10-10 Decommissioning nuclear facilities is a relatively new field which has developed rapidly in the last ten years It involves materials that may be highly radioactive and therefore require sophisticated methods of containment and remote handling The wastes arising from decommissioning are hazardous and have to be stored or disposed of safely in order to protect the environment and future generations Nuclear decommissioning work must be carried out to the highest possible standards to protect workers the general public and the environment This book describes the techniques used for dismantling redundant nuclear facilities the safe storage of radioactive wastes and the restoration of nuclear licensed sites Describes the techniques used for dismantling nuclear facilities safe storage of radioactive wastes and the restoration of nuclear licensed facilities Provides the reader with decommissioning experience accumulated over 15 years by UKAEA Contains valuable information to personnel new to decommissioning and waste management

Disarmament and Decommissioning in the Nuclear Domain Jean-Claude Amiard, 2021-08-19 Following the acquisition of the atomic bomb by five states the United Nations began drafting several treaties to limit nuclear proliferation These efforts failed as four more states also acquired nuclear weapons In a similar vein an attempt to limit atomic weapons primarily within the two superpowers was initiated While the number of weapons has decreased the new bombs now being manufactured are more powerful and more precise negating any reduction in numbers In the field of civil nuclear use all nuclear facilities reactors factories etc have a limited lifespan Once a plant is permanently shut down these facilities must be decommissioned and dismantled These operations are difficult time consuming and costly In addition decommissioning generates large volumes of radioactive waste of various categories including long lived and high activity waste Risks to the environment and to health are not negligible during decommissioning The International Atomic Energy Agency IAEA and the Nuclear Energy Agency NEA of the Organisation for Economic Co operation and Development OECD have produced numerous publications with recommendations Each state has its own decommissioning strategy immediate or delayed and final plan for the site whether it be returning it to greenfield status or obtaining a nuclear site license with centuries long monitoring
