Deep Time Perspective

Wise people and societies do not trade long-term benefits for immediate gratification nor the lessons of the past for the impulses of today. We are all part of an immensely ancient and still unfolding learning adventure, alive in this moment. So help all people and groups play their evolutionary roles consciously and responsibly for future generations and the Earth.

Deep Time Paleobiology's Perspective:

Conservation Paleobiology Gregory P. Dietl, Karl W. Flessa, 2017-11-17 In conservation perhaps no better example exists of the past informing the present than the return of the California condor to the Vermilion Cliffs of Arizona. Extinct in the region for nearly one hundred years, condors were successfully reintroduced starting in the 1990s in an effort informed by the fossil record: condor skeletal remains had been found in the area's late Pleistocene cave deposits. The potential benefits of applying such data to conservation initiatives are unquestionably great, yet integrating the relevant disciplines has proven challenging. Conservation Paleobiology gathers a remarkable array of scientists from Jeremy B. C. Jackson to Geerat J. Vermeij to provide an authoritative overview of how paleobiology can inform both the management of threatened species and larger conservation decisions. Studying endangered species is difficult. They are, by definition, rare; some exist only in captivity, and for those still in their native habitats, any experimentation can potentially have a negative effect on survival. Moreover, a lack of long-term data makes it challenging to anticipate biotic responses to environmental conditions that are outside of our immediate experience. But in the fossil and pre-fossil records from natural accumulations such as reefs, shell beds, and caves to human-made deposits like kitchen middens and archaeological sites, enlightening parallels to the Anthropocene can be found that might serve as a primer for present-day predicaments. Offering both deep time and near time perspectives and exploring a range of ecological and evolutionary dynamics and taxa from terrestrial as well as aquatic habitats, Conservation Paleobiology is a sterling demonstration of how the past can be used to manage for the future, giving new hope for the creation and implementation of successful conservation programs.

Palaeobiogeography and Biodiversity Change Geological Society of London, 2002

Macroecology: Concepts and Consequences British Ecological Society. Symposium, 2003-08 Macroecology: Concepts and Consequences brings together for the first time major researchers in the field to present overviews of current thinking about the form and determinants of macroecological patterns. Each section presents different viewpoints on the answer to a key question in macroecology, such as why are most species rare, why are most species small-bodied, and why are most species restricted in their distribution.

Paleobiology, 2000 Deep Time Douglas H. Erwin, Scott L. Wing, 2001 The fifteen chapters of Deep Time, authored by leading researchers in paleobiology, present an overview of current work and an outline of important unsolved problems in the field, revealing exciting interactions between the study of fossils and recent findings in biogeochemistry, genetics, developmental and functional biology, ecology, evolution, systematics, and sedimentary geology. Within the diversity of this research lie the unifying themes that are central to the discipline: the idea that the histories and past behaviors of living systems are key to understanding their workings, and that deep time is a perspective paleobiology alone brings to the study of living things. Collectively, these pieces are an impressive demonstration of the accelerating strength of paleobiology as a science and function as an invaluable overview of a field that documents not only the history of biological systems but also uses that history to reveal the processes that allow living systems to respond to change Predator-Prey Interactions in the Fossil Record Patricia H. Kelley, Michal Kowalewski, Thor A. Hansen, 2012-12-06 From the Foreword Predator prey interactions are among the most significant of all organism organism interactions It will only be by compiling and evaluating data on predator prey relations as they are recorded in the fossil record that we can hope to tease apart their role in the tangled web of evolutionary interaction over time This volume compiled by a group of expert specialists on the evidence of predator prey interactions in the fossil record is a pioneering effort to collate the information now accumulating in this important field It will be a standard reference on which future study of one of the central dynamics of ecology as seen in the fossil record will be built Richard K Bambach Professor Emeritus Virginia Tech Associate of the Botanical Museum Harvard University Loss of Biodiversity Sharon L. Spray, Karen Leah McGlothlin, 2003 Loss of Biodiversity introduces readers to the important concepts for understanding the environmental challenges and consequences of the declining diversity of life on the planet Contributions from scientists and academics in the social sciences and humanities provide readers with an initial tool kit for understanding the concepts central to their disciplinary perspective and the multi dimensional aspects of the loss of biodiversity Science John Michels (Journalist), 2010 Responses of African Bovids to Pliocene Climatic Change René Bobe, Gerald Gilbert Eck, 2001 The Web of Geological Sciences Marion Eugene Bickford, 2013 This volume covers many of the important advances in the geological sciences from 1963 to 2013 These advances include understanding plate tectonics exploration of the Moon and Mars development of new computing and analytical technologies understanding of the role of microbiology in geologic processes and many others Provided by publisher American Paleontologist , 2008 Current Topics on Taphonomy and Fossilization Miquel de Renzi, 2002 The Archaeology of Anthropogenic Environments Rebecca M.
