role in the country's visual history Choosing Craft Vicki Halper, Diane Douglas, 2009 Choosing Craft explores the history and practice of American craft through the words of influential artists whose lives work and ideas have shaped the field. Editors Vicki Halper and Diane Douglas construct an anecdotal narrative that examines the post World War II development of modern craft which came of age alongside modernist painting and sculpture and was greatly influenced by them as well as by traditional and industrial practices. The anthology is organized according to four activities that ground a professional life in craft: inspiration, training, economics, and philosophy. Halper and Douglas mined a wide variety of sources for their material, including artists' published writings, letters, journal entries, exhibition statements, lecture notes, and oral histories. The detailed record they amassed reveals craft's dynamic relationships with painting, sculpture, design, industry, folk, and ethnic traditions, hobby craft, and political and social movements. Collectively, these reflections form a social history of craft. Choosing Craft ultimately offers artists' writings and recollections as vital and vivid data that deserve widespread study as a primary resource for those interested in the American art form. American Furniture 2008 Luke Beckerdite, 2008 An annual publication forging a link between social history, American studies, and the decorative arts. Artesanías de América, 2011

Reference Encyclopedia of the American Indian Barry T. Klein, 2000 Metalsmith, 1984 An Intricate Web(b) Sandra Alföldy, 2001 This thesis explores the impact of American craftspeople, organizers, and ideologies on the development of professional craft in Canada during the period 1964 to 1974. Research which has identified this as a key decade in the development of infrastructures also reveals a strong reliance on American craft ideals during this period. In particular, the philanthropy of Aileen Osborn Webb and the American Craft Council is discussed as it provided Canadian administrators with models upon which they based specific aspects of their organizations. Although the American Craft Council and the World Crafts Council formed in 1964 provided guidance for Canada, they were unable to assist in navigating the growing tensions between Francophone and Anglophone craftspeople and the emerging self-identity of First Nations craftspeople. It is my hypothesis that rather than negotiating through these difficulties on the national level, Canadian organizers attempted to neutralize them by simply not engaging with the issues. This awkwardness resulted in the 1974 formation of a national craft organization, the Canadian Crafts Council, already undermined by growing dissent. By undertaking studies of specific exhibitions and conferences during this period, I have highlighted the key personalities, ideologies, and organizations and their contributions to professional craft in Canada. Through this process, three areas of debate emerge: First, the recurrence of American experts to validate Canadian craft and the consistent admiration of Aileen Osborn Webb by all levels of administrators and craftspeople indicates the omnipresence of American ideals that Canadian craftspeople both embraced and resisted. Second, the differing perceptions of the professional focus of Quebec craft organizations and the nationalistic emphasis on the preservation of craft techniques and traditions presented an insurmountable obstacle to the formation of a unified Canadian craft organization Third unlike the American Craft Council which operated independently from the federal Indian Arts and Crafts Board the Canadian Guild of Crafts maintained contact but had limited involvement with First Nations craftspeople Instead they continued in the caretaking role they had developed during the early part of the twentieth century as the Canadian Handicrafts Guild Design & Applied Arts Index ,1989 Whitaker's Books in Print ,1998 The International Design Yearbook Robert A.
