

trade and development policy" (p. 156). Nor is the author entirely optimistic about more recent integration efforts, such as the 1989 declaration for the creation of a CARICOM single market and economy (CSME). This effort, however, seems to be on stronger footing because of its emphasis on export promotion and its congruence with structural adjustment programs.

This book is a welcome addition for scholars interested in present-day Caribbean trade issues. It is aimed primarily at the economist with some technical and econometric background. What is needed, however, is an interpretation of the descriptive and statistical results for a wider, nontechnical audience.

Crafting the Third World: Theorizing Underdevelopment in Rumania and Brazil. By JOSEPH L. LOVE. Stanford: Stanford University Press, 1996. Figures. Notes. Bibliography. Index. xiv, 348 pp. Cloth, $60.00. Paper, $24.95.

Brazil and . . . Romania? A hypothetical failure of Stere, Gherea, and Manoilescu—Romanians featured in this book—to touch pen to paper would have changed the history of structuralism and dependency theory in Latin America only trivially. Although Joseph Love devotes two chapters to Mihail Manoilescu, whose best-known work is Theorie du protectionisme et de l'échange international (1929), objectivity forces him to qualify with "possibly" his statement that Manoilescu influenced Prebisch, noting that Prebisch's early works do not cite Manoilescu and that Prebisch later said Manoilescu had not influenced him.

The existence of such influence would be surprising. Manoilescu was not in the same community of economic discourse as Prebisch, a well-read professional. Unaware of advances relevant to his topic, Manoilescu tackled already-solved problems in his amateurish Theorie, and came to wrong answers. He misconstrued Smith and Ricardo, earning devastating reviews from Jacob Viner and J. B. Condliffe. That he fascinates Love, who is not an economist but clearly no slouch on the subject, is puzzling.

Fortunately, finding genetic links between Romania and Brazil is a secondary purpose of Crafting the Third World. Love's primary goal is to compare thought in the two countries about economic backwardness, covering the years 1880 to 1945 in Romania and 1930 to 1980 in Brazil. Low grain prices in the 1880s led Romania to question its role as a supplier of primary products. Fear that depression would return after World War II did the same to Brazil in the 1950s. What is striking in the comparison is how analogous economic conditions led Romanians and Brazilians to similar conclusions in different theoretical contexts. Romanian protectionism grew in a milieu of Marxism and populism; Brazilian structuralism came from liberal economics tempered by Keynes.

Also arresting is how nationalism shaped the theory of underdevelopment. In

Crafting the Third World Joseph LeRoy Love, 1996 This innovative study compares the history of economic ideas and ideologies in Romania and Brazil and more broadly those in East Central Europe and Latin America in the late nineteenth and twentieth centuries Whereas previous histories of the idea of economic development have focused on First World theorists this book considers theorists in two backward countries who made important contributions to the field Latin America is well known to economic historians as the region that gave rise to the Structuralist school and Dependency movement Less well known is the fact that East Central Europe is important as the early training ground and the empirical concern of the first generation of development economists This comparative study examines the ways in which economists and other social scientists in Romania and Brazil confronted the issues of economic backwardness Crafting the Third World Joseph L.
