Laura V. Machia, Christopher R. Agnew, Ximena B. Arriaga, 2020-06-18 Explores the latest developments in the processes underlying intimate relationships from an interdependence theory perspective The Transformative Potential of Black British and British Muslim Literature Lisa Ahrens, 2019-07-03 This study investigates power belonging and exclusion in British society by analysing representations of the mosque the University of Oxford and the plantation in novels by Leila Aboulela Robin Yassin Kassab Diran Adebayo David Dabydeen Andrea Levy and Bernardine Evaristo Lisa Ahrens combines Foucault's theory of heterotopia with elements of Wolfgang Iser's reader response theory to work out Black British and British Muslim literature's potential for destabilising exclusionary boundaries In this way new perspectives open up on the intersections between space power and literature intertwining and enriching the discourses of Cultural and Literary Studies

Creating Mothering for Preterm Infants Lee Anne Roman, 1988 Party of Four Richard Bennett Slatcher, 2007 In recent years a small but growing number of psychologists have begun to examine how the quality and stability of people's romantic relationships can be influenced by people outside of those relationships Couples' friendships with those in their social networks appear to be particularly relevant determinants of what makes for a happy and lasting relationship However previous studies only have indirectly addressed underlying psychological mechanisms that may explain why friendships are beneficial for couples or how such friendships arise in the first place This dissertation examines how friendships between couples form and potential implications for within couple processes e.g. the effects of friendships between couples on relationship quality within a couple Pairs of unacquainted heterosexual couples in committed dating relationships were randomly assigned to one of two conditions where they engaged in a 45 minute interaction In one condition couples carried out self disclosure tasks that gradually escalated in intensity in the other condition couples engaged in non emotional small talk discussions The procedure used was a modified version of the closeness induction task developed by Aron and colleagues Aron Melinat Aron Vallone Bator 1997 to generate interpersonal closeness between individual strangers in this case modified to generate closeness between couples One day later and one month later participants were asked to complete brief online follow up measures to assess long term effects of the experimental manipulation on perceptions of the other couple feelings of closeness toward romantic partners and whether or not they had contacted the other couple Those in the high disclosure condition felt closer to the couples they interacted with and closer to their own partners after the interaction compared to those in the small talk condition Further couples in the high disclosure condition were significantly more likely than those in the small talk condition to contact and meet up with the other couple they had met in the study Mediation analyses suggested several possible processes underlying these effects Implications for studying the interplay of social networks and romantic relationships are discussed Autodesk Fusion 360: A Power Guide for Beginners and Intermediate Users (5th Edition)
