Variation in English and German Nominal Coreference Kerstin Anna Kunz, 2010 The topic of this work is nominal coreference in English and German Its focus is on coreference relations that establish textual coherence and continuity above the local level of the clause The book shows how linguistic options for creating coreference in English and German can be interpreted against the background of their motivating factors It discusses mental text processing German English systemic contrasts and register peculiarities as possible sources for variation on different linguistic levels Hermeneutic and example based observations are complemented by a corpus linguistic analysis of English and German political essays and German translations from the English originals The study finally highlights linguistic and functional correlations of coreference instantiations in English and German texts additionally shedding light on coreference strategies employed in translations It thus yields an incentive for future research as well as providing a wealth of insights for language and translation teaching
