By England's Aid G. A. Henty, 2015-07-12 Excerpt from By England's Aid Or the Freeing of the Netherlands 1585-1604. In my preface to By Pike and Dyke I promised in a future story to deal with the closing events of the war of Independence in Holland. The period over which that war extended was so long and the incidents were so numerous and varied that it was impossible to include the whole within the limit of a single book. The former volume brought the story of the struggle down to the death of the Prince of Orange and the capture of Antwerp; the present gives the second phase of the war when England, who had long unofficially assisted Holland, threw herself openly into the struggle and by her aid mainly contributed to the successful issue of the war. In the first part of the struggle the scene lay wholly among the low lands and cities of Holland and Zeeland and the war was strictly a defensive one waged against overpowering odds. After England threw herself into the strife it assumed far wider proportions and the independence of the Netherlands was mainly secured by the defeat and destruction of the great Armada by the capture of Cadiz and the fatal blow thereby struck at the mercantile prosperity of Spain and by the defeat of the Holy League by Henry of Navarre aided by English soldiers and English gold. For the facts connected with the doings of Sir Francis Vere and the British contingent in Holland I have depended much upon the excellent work by Mr. Clement Markham entitled The Fighting Veres. In this full justice is done to the great English general and his followers and it.
