Crafts and Traditions of the Canary Islands Michael R. Eddy, Mike Eddy, 1989 During the fifteenth century the Spanish Crown wrested control of the Canary Islands from the Berber speaking natives Over the succeeding centuries the islands have been Europeanised to such an extent that the average visitor might think that all trace of the pre Spanish culture had been lost long ago This is however far from being the case as the countryside and in the smaller islands where the effects of the tourist boom have been less marked In an attempt to disentangle the complex roots of Canarian culture as it exists today this book concentrates on the material aspects of Canary Islands traditions domestic pottery making and rural crafts and by use of archaeological finds of pottery and of the leatherwork and basketry preserved by the Canaries dry climate closely parallel the modern craft products Where appropriate the technologies and practices introduced from Europe are also described Aspects of the non material culture the sports music and festivals are included because although much altered by peninsular Spanish immigrants and by Canarian emigrants returning from South America these too have their roots in the pre Hispanic period tubers either to cassava bread or to a coarse toasted flour farinha Nutritious manioc beer known as chicha is also produced and consumed in large quantities at feasts and ceremonies Manioc is not just a food but a way of life in the Amazon and the daily routine of women in particular is centred around it About the author Linda Mowat graduated from the Institute of Archaeology in London and proceeded to the University of Leicester where she obtained the Graduate Certificate in Museum Studies Her archaeological fieldwork included three seasons in Colombia as a surveyor and while there she was able to visit Indian groups in the tropical forests as well as in the Andes She subsequently worked as Research Assistant at the Pitt Rivers Museum Oxford
