

The caverns

Near the end of the Paleolithic, Neanderthal man and Cro-Magnon man took advantage of caves and caverns as dwellings, to protect themselves against cold and humidity, and also to make burials and rituals. In spring and summer they built small huts with branches and furs. They spent their days in hunting, necessary for feeding.

SURVIVAL

It was achieved thanks to community life, wit, technical discoveries and social capacity.

Women

They should take care of keeping fire to food preparation and take hunting, among other things.

Fire

The hearth at the entrance or in the interior of the cave or prehistoric hut and the possibility of cooking food during the night for sheltered animals from getting close.

Hunting

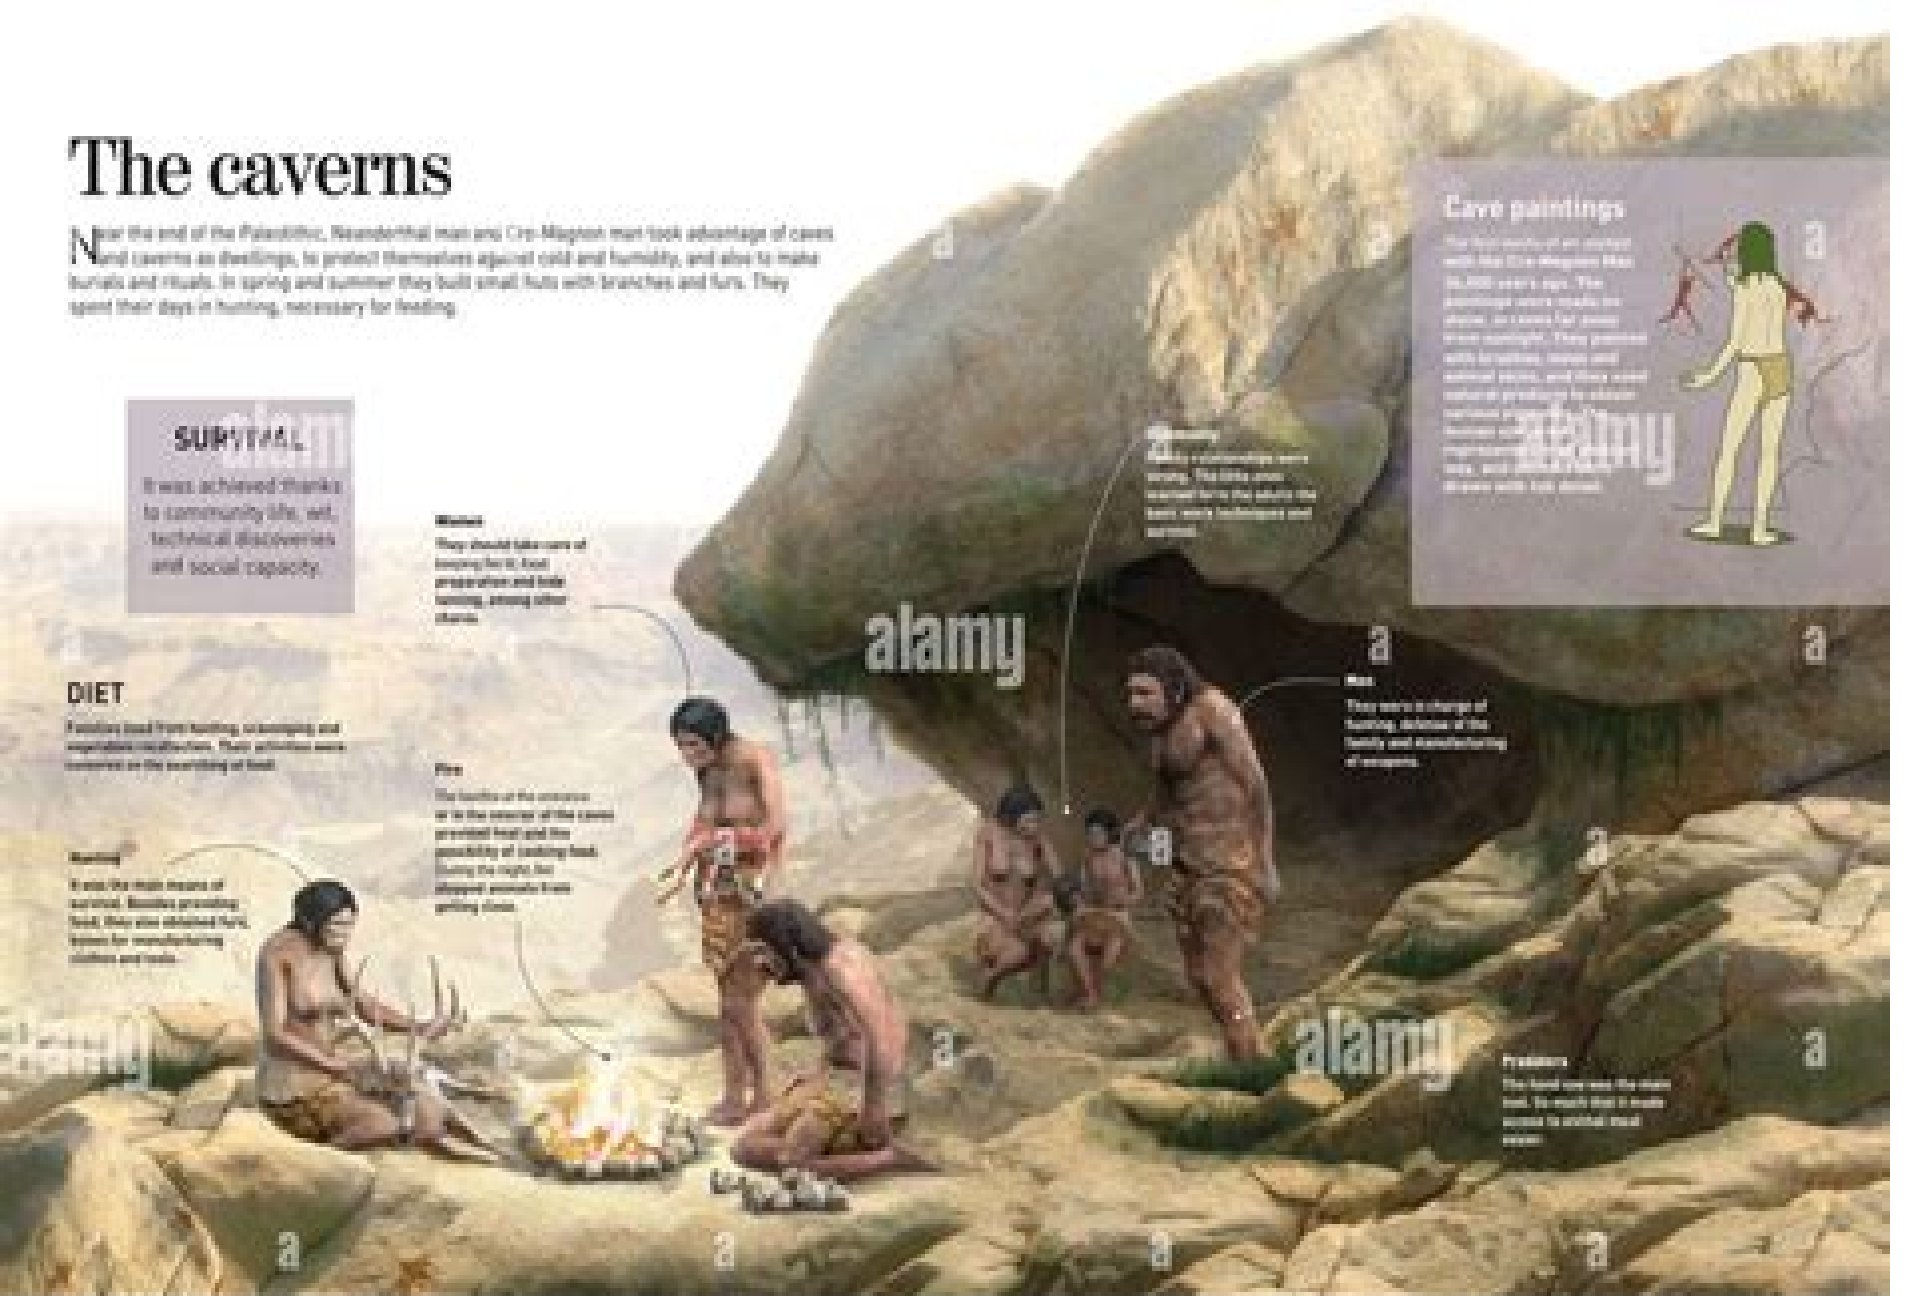

It was the main means of survival. Besides providing food, they also obtained furs, bones for manufacturing clothes and tools.

DIET

Food was based on hunting, scavenging and vegetable resources. Their activities were centered on the searching of food.

Cave paintings

The first evidence of an overlap with the Cro-Magnon man is 15,000 years ago. The paintings were made in caves, in caves for some time tonight. They painted with bryozoa, bones and animal skins, and there were natural paintings to obtain natural paintings. The paintings were made in caves, in caves for some time tonight. They painted with bryozoa, bones and animal skins, and there were natural paintings to obtain natural paintings.
