

Categorization, accentuation and social judgement

Contrast effects have long been recognized as important for the study of judgement. It has been predicted that the presence of a categorization superimposed on a series of stimuli (and correlated with their magnitude) would serve to accentuate judged differences between and judged similarities within classes. Fifty-five subjects judged political statements, classified in terms of their authors. It was predicted that the contrast effects would be mediated by the salience of the categorization, the political views of the subjects, their affective ratings of authors and evaluations of political terms. Unlike numerous other studies with similar designs the results provided evidence for both the accentuation of inter-class differences and intra-class similarities. The relationships between judges' views and contrast were in accordance with accentuation theory and social identity theory, in that judges whose positions were congruent with the positive evaluations of the scale labels showed more contrast between classes. The results are discussed with reference to social identity theory and the role of category salience.

Judgements of the differences between groups of stimuli have long been of interest in psychophysics and in the study of stereotype formation. It has been proposed (for example, by Tajfel, 1969) that the accentuation of differences observed between groups of psychophysical stimuli is analogous to the perception of differences between social groups.

Tajfel (1959; Tajfel & Wilkes, 1963) argued that labels (e.g. the letters A and B) consistently applied to otherwise unclassified stimuli (e.g. lines differing in length from each other by only small amounts) would affect the judged magnitude of those stimuli when the labelling of the stimuli is correlated with the position of the stimuli on the judgement dimension. For example, when all of the larger stimuli are in one group (labelled 'B'), the labels become cues which observers use as information on which to base their judgements.

Paraphrasing Tajfel's hypotheses (which we will term the accentuation hypotheses), the presence of such a classifying label should accentuate:

1. the perceived differences between members of different classes (the inter-class effect); and
2. the perceived similarities between members of the same class (the intra-class effect).

ABRAMS, Michael A. Hogg, 1990-11-26 The Self in Social Judgment Mark D. Alicke, David A. Dunning, Joachim Krueger, 2013-05-13 The volume begins with a historical overview of the self in social judgment and outlines the major issues Subsequent chapters all written by leading experts in their respective areas identify and elaborate four major themes regarding the self in social judgment the role of the self as an information source for evaluating others or what has been called social projection the assumption of personal superiority as reflected in the pervasive tendency for people to view their characteristics more favorably than those of others the role of the self as a comparison standard from or toward which other people's behaviors and attributes are assimilated or contrasted the relative weight people place on the individual and collective selves in defining their attributes and comparing them to those of other people The Quarterly Journal of Experimental Psychology, 1972 Striving and Feeling Leonard L. Martin, Abraham Tesser, 2014-05-12 Recently research on the ways in which goals affect and self regulation influence one another has enjoyed an upsurge New findings are being published and new theories are being developed to integrate these findings This volume reports on the latest of this work including a substantial amount of data and theory that has not yet been published Emanating from a conference exploring affect as both a cause and effect in various social contexts this book examines some of the complex and reciprocal relationships among goals self structures feelings thoughts and behavior The chapters address the effects of intrinsic versus extrinsic goals the different effects of approach versus avoidance goals the role of awareness in goal pursuit and affective states the meaning of affective states in relation to goal attainment the impact of hedonistic concerns as motivational factors how people regulate their moods and the role of the self in affective experiences Basic Processes, 1994 Intergroup Cognition and Intergroup Behavior Constantine Sedikides, John Schopler, Chester A. Insko, Chester Insko, 2013-02-01 Social psychology has maintained a keen interest over the years in issues related to intergroup behavior such as ingroup favoritism and discrimination The field has also been preoccupied with ways to reduce prejudice and discrimination Intergroup contact has been offered as the main mechanism for prejudice and discrimination reduction In the last 15 years the social cognitive perspective has been applied to the study of intergroup relations Theoretical advances have been made regarding such issues as the representation of information about ingroup and outgroup members the structural properties of stereotypes the relation between cognitive representation and judgment and the ways in which cognition effect and motivation interactively influence the perception judgment and memory of ingroup and outgroup members The first volume in this new series this book seeks to bring the above two traditions together Focusing on the interplay between cognition and behavior in intergroup settings it addresses four general questions How does intergroup cognition perceptions judgments and memories influence intergroup behavior ingroup favoritism and discrimination How does intergroup behavior subsequently change intergroup cognition What is the mediational role of effect motivational processes and social context How effective can change in intergroup cognition be in altering intergroup behavior This volume focuses not on a specific theory but rather on an approach This approach is the interface between intergroup cognition and intergroup behavior The various contributors are leading investigators in these areas and share the belief that the field has reached a level of maturity where it can start asking the hard questions regarding the complex and multifaceted ways in which intergroup cognition and behavior are related The investigators do not just summarize their work Instead they connect aspects of their work to the theme of the volume and integrate their work with existing approaches in the relevant literature Content and Process
