

DAYS WE WOULD RATHER KNOW

There are days we would rather know than these, as there is always, later, a woman we would rather have married than whom we did, in that severe nowness time pushed, imperfectly, to then. Whether, standing in the museum before Rembrandt's "Juno," we stand before beauty, or only before a consensus about beauty, is a question that makes all beauty suspect . . . and all marriages. Last night, leaves circled the base of the ginkgo as if the sun had shattered during the night into a million gold coins no one had the sense to claim. And now, there are days we would rather know than these, days when to stand before beauty and before "Juno" are, convincingly, the same, days when the shattered sunlight rests in the trees and the women we marry remain interesting and beautiful both at once, and their men. And though there are days we would rather know than now, I am, at heart, a scared and simple man. So I tighten my arms around the woman I love, now and imperfectly, stand before "Juno" whispering beautiful beautiful until I believe it, and—when I come home at night—run out into the day's pale dusk with my broom and my dustpan, sweeping the coins from the base of the ginkgo, something to keep for a better tomorrow:
days we would rather know that never come.
