We Lived with Dignity Selma Leydesdorff, 1994 She found that the processing of practically every interview every fact involved a struggle between reality distortion and myth De Amsterdamse Jodenhoek in foto's, 1900-1940 Mozes Heiman Gans, 1974 Foto's van de Jodenbuurt in de Nederlandse hoofdstad die een beeld geven van de woonomstandigheden en het straatleven in de eerste helft van de 20e eeuw Leonard Freed Leonard Freed, Bernadette van Woerkom, Joods Historisch Museum (Amsterdam, Netherlands), 2015 At the start of his life long career Magnum photographer Leonard Freed 1929-2006 lived for many years in Amsterdam from 1957 till 1970 As an American Jew coming from a family of Russian immigrants he felt at ease in this historic city with its liberal spirit and longstanding tradition of tolerance to Jews Fascinated by the remarkable recovery after the Holocaust of Jewish life in Amsterdam where only 14 000 of 75 000 Jews survived the young Freed made this the topic of his first documentary as a professional photographer Immersing himself in the Amsterdam Jewish community for more than a year in 1957-1958 he visited synagogues study centres schools and festivities and followed people in their homes at work and on the streets Working within the traditions of humanistic photography Freed made a multifaceted and compelling portrayal of a community that had endured unimaginable sufferings but was now trying to forget and rebuild a new life demonstrating a striking resilience and vitality Considering himself to be an author rather than a journalist from the onset it was Freed's aim not to make an encyclopaedia of Jewish life but to paint an atmosphere to depict a vibrant community He therefore focused optimistically on the younger generations and left out any hints to the Holocaust such as the ruins of the Jewish quarter This hopeful perspective of looking at the future and forgetting the past seems to be both a reflection of Freed's own outlook on life and the prevailing spirit in the Jewish community in the 1950s Today in hindsight we know that the traumas of war were still lingering on and could not be ignored to burst out in the 1960s and 1970s This knowledge of hidden pain and silence brings to the pictures a duality a historical layering and a sense of poignancy that Freed and the people he photographed could not have been aware of Exhibition Historisch Museum Amsterdam The Netherlands 30-10-2015 14-02-2016
