Materials

- Camera and Printer
- White Paper
- Green and Red Paper Circles and Round Sponges
- Tempera Paint
- Scissors and Glue
- Crayons or Oil Pastels
- Copies of foods from The Very Hungry Caterpillar

Introductory Activities

- Read The Very Hungry Caterpillar by Eric Carle, and discuss how the caterpillar morphs into a butterfly.
- Ask the students to think about any changes they've made recently concerning growing up.
- Talk about how they used to crawl (like the caterpillar) but now they walk and do more grown up things like going to school!

1 Take and Print Student Photos

For this activity, each student will need two photos. They will need a close-up photo of their face for their caterpillar and a shot of themselves with arms outstretched for their butterfly. Take and print these photos ahead of time. This would be a great task for an art room volunteer.

2 Create Caterpillar and Butterfly

For the caterpillar's body, have students use the round sponges to print circles onto green paper circles. As a challenge, have them create a pattern using two colors. For the butterfly wings, have students drip red, yellow, and blue paint on one side of an open, pre-folded piece of paper. Then, fold the paper back in half to transfer the paint to the other side creating a symmetrical print. Let Dry.

3 Add Student Photos and Details

Have students glue down their printed green circles in a row and glue the photo of their face to a red circle at the front to make the caterpillar. Then, have them glue the photo of their entire body to the middle of the butterfly. Then, using crayons, have students add details to the caterpillar like antenna, legs, and fuzz. Early finishers can cut and paste their favorite foods at the bottom of the caterpillar to show what they would eat.

Insider Tips

- Depending on your students' skill levels, you may want to cut out the photos for them.
- If necessary, draw half of a butterfly shape so students know where to drip the paint.
