Gillespie,2016-02-12 The American daguerreotype as something completely new a mechanical invention that produced an image a hybrid of fine art and science and technology The daguerreotype invented in France came to America in 1839 By 1851 this early photographic method had been improved by American daguerreotypists to such a degree that it was often referred to as the American process The daguerreotype now perhaps mostly associated with stiffly posed portraits of serious visaged nineteenth century personages was an extremely detailed photographic image produced through a complicated process involving a copper plate light sensitive chemicals and mercury fumes. It was as Sarah Kate Gillespie shows in this generously illustrated history something wholly and remarkably new, a product of science and innovative technology that resulted in a visual object. It was a hybrid with roots in both fine art and science and it interacted in reciprocally formative ways with fine art, science and technology. Gillespie maps the evolution of the daguerreotype as medium and as profession from its introduction to the ascendancy of the American process, tracing its relationship to other fields and the professionalization of those fields. She does so by recounting the activities of a series of American daguerreotypists including fine artists, scientists and mechanical tinkerers. She describes for example experiments undertaken by Samuel F B Morse as he made the transition from artist to inventor, how artists made use of the daguerreotype both borrowing conventions from fine art and establishing new ones for a new medium, the use of the daguerreotype in various sciences particularly astronomy and technological innovators who drew on their work in the mechanical arts. By the 1860s the daguerreotype had been supplanted by newer technologies. Its rise and fall represents an early instance of the ever constant stream of emerging visual technologies.

The Camera and the Press Marcy J. Dinius, 2012-03-15

Before most Americans ever saw an actual daguerreotype they encountered this visual form through written descriptions published and rapidly reprinted in newspapers throughout the land. In The Camera and the Press Marcy J Dinius examines how the first written and published responses to the daguerreotype set the terms for how we now understand the representational accuracy and objectivity associated with the photograph as well as the democratization of portraiture that photography enabled. Dinius's archival research ranges from essays in popular nineteenth century periodicals to daguerreotypes of Americans, Liberians, slaves and even fictional characters. Examples of these portraits are among the dozens of illustrations featured in the book. The Camera and the Press presents new dimensions of Nathaniel Hawthorne's The House of the Seven Gables, Herman Melville's Pierre, Harriet Beecher Stowe's Uncle Tom's Cabin and Frederick Douglass's The Heroic Slave. Dinius shows how these authors strategically incorporated aspects of daguerreian representation to advance their aesthetic, political and social agendas. By recognizing print and visual culture as one, Dinius redefines such terms as art, objectivity, sympathy, representation, race and nationalism and their interrelations in nineteenth century America.

The Origins of American Photography Keith F. Davis, Jane Lee Aspinwall, Marc F. Wilson, 2007

In this text Keith F Davis examines photography's social history and aesthetic development in an era of rapid national growth. He demonstrates how key themes and genres including the business of daguerreian portraiture, the markets for Civil War images and the art of Western landscape photography reflected the concerns and values of nineteenth century society. Photographers of this era expressed a new national consciousness while at the same time helping to shape it They also explored the visual language of a radically new medium laying the foundation for all of photography s subsequent history      The Origins of American Photography Keith F.
