Kristi Griffin, 2021-03-15 Working online or remotely has become a necessity for many this year. However, this is just the start of a larger trend. It is predicted that by 2027 the majority of the US workforce will be working remotely online. The office work lifestyle is familiar to most people: get dressed in your company clothes, commute to work, work in a room with a few other people, take scheduled breaks, et cetera. But remote workers at online jobs don't encounter most of those situations. They don't need to get dressed in company attire or commute to work. But it can be difficult for online workers to navigate working away from the office. Best practices are not as well defined because online work, at least in its current form, is still relatively new so it can be difficult to know how you should act when working from home. There is no single formula for how to become an efficient online worker. Everyone will work at different times and have different tips on how to make the most of their time. Indeed, one of the major benefits of remote work is the flexibility it affords. Working from home means that you can adjust your schedule to suit your commitments and your timetable as it is in your hands now. However, this means that you need to learn what works best for you when managing your priorities and time, and everyone is slightly different. That said, there are a few common practices you can expect to use as a remote worker. In this guide, we've compiled the best practices for online remote workers, ranging from how to participate in meetings to how you can find an online job as a remote worker. If you're working from home or aspire to do so, this guide is for you. Wipf,2006 Of the approximately 25 000 bridges in Iowa 28% are classified as structurally deficient functionally obsolete or both The state of Iowa thus follows the national trend of an aging infrastructure in dire need of repair or replacement with a relatively limited funding base Therefore there is a need to develop new materials with properties that may lead to longer life spans and reduced life cycle costs In addition new methods for determining the condition of structures are needed to monitor the structures effectively and identify when the useful life of the structure has expired or other maintenance is needed High performance steel HPS has emerged as a material with enhanced weldability weathering capabilities and fracture toughness compared to conventional structural steels In 2004 the Iowa Department of Transportation opened Iowa's first HPS girder bridge the East 12th Street Bridge over I 235 in Des Moines IA The objective of this project was to evaluate HPS as a viable option for use in Iowa bridges with a continuous structural health monitoring SHM system The scope of the project included documenting the construction of the East 12th Street Bridge and concurrently developing a remote continuous SHM system using fiber optic sensing technology to evaluate the structural performance of the bridge The SHM system included bridge evaluation parameters similar to design parameters used by bridge engineers for evaluating the structure Through the successful completion of this project a baseline of bridge performance was established that can be used for continued long term monitoring of the structure In general the structural performance of the HPS bridge exceeded the design parameters and is performing well Although some problems were encountered with the SHM system the system functions well and recommendations for improving the system have been made
