ABSTRACT

The aim of this study was to report the success of a clindamycin graded challenge. The patient was a 39-year-old human immunodeficiency virus-infected male with toxoplasmic encephalitis (TE) with a history of trimethoprim/sulfamethoxazole (TMP/SMX) and clindamycin allergy. He developed a reaction during TMP/SMX desensitization. Following the reaction, a graded challenge with clindamycin was performed in this study, and he became tolerant to clindamycin. No adverse drug reactions developed during the graded challenge. He successfully continued suppressive therapy with no further reactions or recurrences.

Keywords: Clindamycin; Graded challenge; Toxoplasmic encephalitis; AIDS patient

INTRODUCTION

Toxoplasmic encephalitis (TE) is found in 23.2% of patients with acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) in Thailand [1]. Recently, there has been a scarcity of TE treatment regimen. Therefore, a graded challenge is one method of safely using suspected medications in patients with a history of minor adverse drug reactions (ADRs) and multiple drug allergies needing medications to treat TE.

A graded challenge is defined as an administration of progressively increasing doses of a medication until a therapeutic dose is reached. The objective of a graded challenge is to verify or exclude the reaction in patients who are unlikely to be allergic to a specific medication. When the reaction is non-immunoglobulin E (IgE) mediated, graded challenges are a recommendable strategy to reintroduce medication. The patient who tolerates a graded challenge without allergic reactions is considered as non-allergy [2, 3]. Herein, we describe the case of an AIDS patient with a history of trimethoprim/sulfamethoxazole (TMP/SMX) and clindamycin allergy who was reintroduced to clindamycin by a graded challenge strategy to treat TE.
