The Changing Geography of Advanced Producer Services P. W. Daniels, Frank Moulaert, 1991 The service sector is the fastest growing but least studied area of modern economic geography so many economic geographers are now turning their attention to how the so called tertiary economy operates to produce distinctive patterns of location and regional development Producer services are those provided to enterprises rather than to individual consumers and this book is the first to be devoted specifically to assessing their role as spatial phenomena and agents of economic and geographical change Daniels and Moulaert approach the topic at two levels firstly theoretical where conventional neoclassical models of production and exchange seem to have little value in explaining service production and therefore new theoretical perspectives need to be developed and secondly empirical which presents regional development histories of producer services such as accountancy consultancy or finance to illustrate the complexity of the geographical dimensions of the modern service company This is a landmark book for students and researchers in geography economics planning and public policy

Geography of Production and Economic Integration Miroslav Jovanovic, 2002-01-04 This book discusses the way in which economic integration and preferential trade agreements reinforce or alter the existing location of industries Using a conceptual approach with real life examples the author seeks to clarify and explain the key tendencies of the relationship and influence between spatial distribution of production and economic integration Geography of Production and Economic Integration will develop students specialists and policymakers understanding of this highly topical subject

Service Industries in Regional Development William J. Coffey, James John McRae, 1989 This document presents a broad empirical picture of the national regional and urban structure of the Canadian economy It identifies the factors which may be causing the relative shift towards employment in service industries and occupations and shows that the lack of actual data on interregional flows of service outputs effectively precludes the empirical testing of regional general equilibrium models involving service industries It concludes by bringing forth the regional policy implications embedded in the conceptual and empirical work on service industries

Service Industries and Regions Juan R. Cuadrado-Roura, 2013-03-26 The service sector in most advanced economies accounts for up to seventy percent of employment and GDP and given its growing importance has received much research attention over the last two decades However not very much attention has been paid to the relationship between this sector and both its territorial impact and regional effects The main objective of this book is to offer a comprehensive approach to these aspects focusing particularly on the location factors of service industries and the importance of some specific services such as business services and knowledge and information services The contributions have been prepared by well known experts in the field from a wide number of countries The focus of all contributions is not only on theoretical aspects but also provides empirical analyses on specific countries and topics such as the geographical concentration globalization impacts foreign direct investments and innovation

The Changing Geography of Advanced Producer Services Peter W. Daniels, 1992 The service sector is one of the most rapidly expanding but least studied areas of modern economic geography Producer services are those available to enterprises as opposed to individual consumers and this is the first book written specifically to assess their role as spatial phenomena and agents of economic and geographical change Begins with a new theoretical perspective followed by an empirical outlook which explores the regional development histories of such producer services as accountancy consultancy or finance in order to demonstrate the complex geographical dimensions regarding modern service economy
