Syene VI Gregory Williams,2022-12-31 In the 9th century CE the city of Aswan Egypt was a prosperous provincial capital on the pilgrimage route to Mecca and Medina via the Red Sea as well as trade routes connecting the Nile River to the Wadi al Allaqi mines Egypt s main source of gold The city was identified by medieval writers and geographers as situated at the frontier between Muslim Egypt and Christian Nubia Salvage excavations under the auspices of the Swiss Egyptian mission in Syene Old Aswan have revealed considerable evidence of medieval Islamic activity Evidence from 9th 10th century ceramic assemblages uncovered during these investigations is compared and contrasted with a variety of historical sources concerning this same period The evidence suggests that a particular style of common utilitarian ceramics produced in the Aswan region was utilized frequently and carried or exported extensively throughout Upper Egypt the Eastern Desert and Lower Nubia during the 9th 10th centuries and beyond The assemblages demonstrate a considerable distinction with the corpus of common ceramics of Fustat and Lower Egypt in the early Islamic period as well as those of contemporary Upper Nubia and sites further south along the Nile into Northeastern Africa Aswan and the First Cataract region came to function as a central node of a network marked by a regional material culture that transcended traditional political or religious divisions between Egypt and Nubia or Muslim and Christian The evidence from Aswan provides an alternative interpretation of medieval landscapes and regionalism one which prioritizes the material culture of daily life over the presumed divisions of political history or religious boundaries

Israel Museum Studies in Archaeology ,2007 Becoming Walāta Timothy Cleaveland,2002 Becoming Walata is a pre colonial history of social identity in Walata an oasis in the southwestern Sahara Using Arabic documents some newly discovered Timothy Cleaveland analyzes representations of lineage ethnicity and race and argues that Saharans perceived these identities as mutable Walatis transformed themselves through strategic alliances and intermarriage then rationalized these changes through Islam This evidence contradicts the European colonial model of Saharan society which portrayed social relations as static and determined by patrilineal descent Identity Conflicts Esther Gottlieb,2017-09-08 Social conflicts are ubiquitous and inherent in organized social life This volume examines the origins and regulation of violent identity conflicts It focuses on the regulation of conflict the constraining directing and repression of violence through institutional rules and understandings The core question the authors address is how violence is regulated and the social and political consequences of such regulation The contributors provide a multidisciplinary multi regional analysis of identity conflicts and their regulation The chapters focus on the forging and suppression of religious and ethnic identities problematic national identities the recreation of identity in post conflict peace building efforts and the forging of collective identities in the process of democratic state building The instances of violent conflict treated here range across the globe from Central and South America to Asia to the Balkans and to the Islamic world One of the key findings is that conflicts involving religious ethnic or national identity are inherently more violence prone and require distinctive methods of regulation Identity is a question both of power and of integrity This means that both material and symbolic needs must be addressed in order to constrain or regulate these conflicts Accordingly some chapters draw on a political economy approach that places primary emphasis on resources organization and interests while others develop a cultural approach focusing on how identities are constructed grievances defined blame attributed and redress articulated This volume offers new ideas about the regulation of identity conflicts at both the global and local level that engage both tradition and modernization It will be of interest to policymakers political scientists human rights activists historians and anthropologists 2010 Redaktion Osnabrück,2011-06-16 Early Islamic Syria Alan Walmsley,2007 A study of how archaeology interprets developments in the social history of Islamic Syria and the implications to understanding the ever growing body of archaeological evidence
