Many people such as me who have grown up in Gallup New Mexico and the surrounding reservations learn accept and respect this terminology as particular to Indian way of life This story is historical fiction since there are some events and dialogue that could not be verified in the first person It unfolds by threading historical cultural and personal events of David s life with date certain events during and after World War II Stories from my grandmother recollections of my dad and recorded information from David and his widow Lynda are significant to this story There were names in David s material that I could not locate or confirm so I changed their identities I created some people in the context of the times and events Unlike many stereotypical narratives of down and out life on an Indian reservation this story reflects beauty and majesty in Navajo life Having spent most of my life among Indian people this is also a reflection of my appreciation and admiration of Indian spirituality Through determination David Chethlahe Paladin became a renowned artist Upon his death in 1984 Newsweek Magazine noted that he was the most prominent American Indian artist of our time A wounded healer and a wounded warrior are one We can embrace because we ve been pushed away We can heal because we ve been torn apart We can touch people s minds because we have lost our own We can speak wisdom because our tongues have been cut off and our voices have been denied We can run like the wind because our legs have been broken David Chethlahe Paladin
