Faculty Job Satisfaction Martha Wingard Tack, Carol Logan Patitu, 1992-05-12 Given the impending shortage of prospective college faculty that will exist by the year 2000 the topics of faculty job satisfaction recruitment and retention must be given priority attention Moreover the faculty of the future must reflect the diversity of the population to be served consequently immediate actions must be taken to ensure that faculty positions are made attractive to women and minorities alike Numerous internal stressors uniquely affecting women and minorities must be recognized and dealt with to enhance job satisfaction and create a better fit between the faculty role and the person involved It has been shown that women faculty members are less satisfied with their positions than their male counterparts because they are often forced to sacrifice more in terms of their personal lives in order to meet the demands of their jobs as well as their families As for minority faculty members they generally find themselves less likely to be tenured compared to whites are often concerned about lower salaries feel isolated and less supported and often encounter prejudice and racism Leaders and faculty in higher education must implement a variety of recruiting and retention strategies if a faculty representing a diverse culture is to become a reality Actions include 1 recruiting women and minorities into undergraduate and graduate programs in sufficient numbers to fill the pool for faculty positions 2 attracting women into disciplines where they are currently underrepresented and 3 using incentives for departments to diversify Contains an index and over 200 references GLR

Redesigning Higher Education Lion F. Gardiner, 1994-11-13 This monograph reviews empirical studies on various aspects of higher education relating to the effectiveness of instruction in regard to four areas curriculum instruction campus psychological climate and academic advising After an introduction the first section describes the development of critical skills how these skills develop and the conditions believed necessary to produce them The following four sections examine the four core areas central to student development and the contribution research suggests they now make to the development 1 curriculum methods the intellectual climate of the classroom students involvement effects of the curriculum 2 instruction classroom tests and grades 3 the campus climate integration into the campus community commuter and part time students students involvement with faculty and minority group members and 4 academic advising developmental advising the necessity for training in advising and evaluation recognition and reward of advising The next three sections describe opportunities for dramatic gains in students learning examining evidence about the relative capacity of students to learn at a very high level describing seven specific changes which can improve students learning and addressing issues of leadership management and professional development The final section presents a vision and a challenge to develop a new kind of community on campus Contains approximately 650 references DB

Prices, Productivity, and Investment Edward P. St. John, 1994-04-14 This analysis critically examines the cost controversy in higher education with an eye to resolving the crisis which is currently serving to exacerbate public willingness to fund higher education An introduction touches on the role and influence of political ideologies and offers a framework to be used throughout the analysis for critically examining ideological claims regarding the cost controversy A section on the role of federal financing strategies and their contribution to the cost controversy looks at the federal role in pricing promoting productivity and the concept of student aid as investment A section on state financial strategies also looks at pricing improving productivity and investment and assesses various ideological claims about state issues A section on institutional financing strategies reviews institutional perspectives understanding price changes and productivity the investment view and ideological claims A section on understanding financial strategy presents a reconstruction of the models typically used to assess financial strategies in higher education by first critically examining four common theories and then proposing a reconstructed model for assessing financial strategy A final section uses the reconstructed framework to assess a range of approaches that federal and state governments and institutions could use An index is included Contains over 250 references JB
