

About Employee Leasing

- Employee leasing is the practice of placing a company's employees on another company's payroll. The employees stay in place, working for their original employer, but they are paid by the leasing company. In addition, their insurance, retirement savings, and other benefits are handled by the leasing company. The original employer pays the leasing company the full amount of payroll, payroll taxes, and fringe benefits, plus an administrative fee. In return, the original employer does not have to deal with insurance companies, 401(k) issues, or a host of human resources compliance issues. The administrative fee paid to the leasing company is usually less than the cost of the payroll, benefits, and other specialists in the human resources department.
