Decisions In Action:

Decision Making and Action Jean-Charles Pomerol, 2012-12-27 Making a decision of any importance is never simple On the one hand specialists in decision theory do not come within the reach of most policy makers and secondly there are very few books on pragmatic decision that are not purely anecdotal In addition there is virtually no book that provides a link between decision making and action This book provides a bridge between the latest results in artificial intelligence neurobiology psychology and decision making for action What is the role of intuition or emotion What are the main psychological biases of which we must be wary How can we avoid being manipulated What is the proper use of planning How can we remain rational even if one is not an expert in probabilities Perhaps more importantly for managers how does one go from decision to action So many questions fundamental to the practice of decision making are addressed This book dissects all issues that arise almost daily for decision makers at least for major decisions Drawing on numerous examples this book answers in plain language and imagery all your questions The final chapter takes the form of a brief reminder everything you have to remember to be a good decision maker

Digest of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of Washington:

Abandonment-Household goods Arthur Remington, 1907 Percept, Decision, Action Derek J. Chadwick, Matthew Diamond, Jamie A. Goode, 2006-05-12 Seemingly simple behaviours turn out on reflection to be discouragingly complex For many years cognitive operations such as sensation perception comparing percepts to stored models short term and long term memory decision making and planning of actions were treated by most neuroscientists as separate areas of research This was not because the neuroscience community believed these operations to act independently it is intuitive that any common cognitive process seamlessly interweaves these operations but because too little was known about the individual processes constituting the full behaviour and experimental paradigms and data collection methods were not sufficiently well developed to put the processes in sequence in any controlled manner These limitations are now being overcome in the leading cognitive neuroscience laboratories and this book is a timely summary of the current state of the art The theme of the book is how the brain uses sensory information to develop and decide upon the appropriate action and how the brain determines the appropriate action to optimize the collection of new sensory information It addresses several key questions How are percepts built up in the cortex and how are judgments of the percept made In what way does information flow within and between cortical regions and what is accomplished by successive and reverberating stages of processing How are decisions made about the percept subsequently acted upon through their conversion to a response according to the learned criterion for action How does the predicted or expected sensation interact with the actual incoming flow of sensory signals The chapters and discussions in the book reveal how answering these questions requires an understanding of sensory motor loops our perception of the world drives new actions and the actions undertaken at any moment lead to a new view of the world This book is a fascinating read for all clinical and experimental psychologists and neuroscientists as well as anyone interested in

Klein, Judith Orasanu, Roberta Calderwood, 1992-08-01 This book describes the new perspective of naturalistic decision making The point of departure is how people make decisions in complex time pressured ambiguous and changing environments The purpose of this book is to present and elaborate on past models developed to explain this type of decision making The central philosophy of the book is that classical decision theory has been unproductive since it is so heavily grounded in economics and mathematics The contributors believe there is little to be learned from laboratory studies about how people actually handle difficult and interesting tasks therefore the book presents a critique of classical decision theory The models of naturalistic decision making described by the contributors were derived to explain the behavior of firefighters business people jurors nuclear power plant operators and command and control officers The models are unique in that they address the way people use experience to frame situations and adopt courses of action The models explain the strengths of skilled decision makers Naturalistic decision research requires the examination of field settings and a section of the book covers methods for conducting meaningful research outside the laboratory In addition since his approach has applied value the book covers issues of training and decision support systems The Massachusetts register, 2001
