Decision Making For Public Libraries:

Decision Making for Public Libraries Alice B. Ihrig,1989 Evaluation and Library Decision Making Peter Hernon,Charles R. McClure,1990 Evaluation which is a critical component of the planning process assesses the effectiveness and efficiency of library programs and services in the context of stated goals and objectives This book views evaluation as a type of research study in which evaluators collect either research or management data Chapters discuss steps of the evaluation process and provide practical examples of the application of these steps to specific library problems The overall objectives of the volume are to introduce readers to the relationship between planning and evaluation to discuss the components of an evaluation study in clear prose so that readers can easily understand the different steps to foster an attitude that recognizes the importance of evaluation for the development of library programs and services to offer examples of each component of the evaluation process to identify writings on evaluation in libraries and information centers and to encourage organizational change and underscore the importance of evaluation to library decision making Determining the Data Needs for Decision Making in Public Libraries ,2004 Library decision makers evaluate community needs and library capabilities in order to select the appropriate services offered by their particular institution Evaluations of the programs and services may indicate that some are ineffective or inefficient or that formerly popular services are no longer needed The internal and external conditions used for decision making change Monitoring these conditions and evaluations allows the library to make new decisions that maintain its relevance to the community Administrators must have ready access to appropriate data that will give them the information they need for library decision making Today s computer based libraries accumulate electronic data in their integrated library systems ILS and other operational databases however these systems do not provide tools for examining the data to reveal trends and patterns nor do they have any means of integrating important information from other programs and files where the data are stored in incompatible formats These restrictions are overcome by use of a data warehouse and a set of analytical software tools forming a decision support system The data warehouse must be tailored to specific needs and users to succeed Libraries that wish to pursue support can begin by performing a needs analysis to determine the most important use of the proposed warehouse and to identify the data elements needed to support this use The purpose of this study is to complete the needs analysis phase for a data warehouse for a certain public library that is interested in using its electronic data for data mining and other analytical processes This study is applied research Data on users needs were collected through two rounds of face to face interviews Participants were selected purposively The phase two interviews were structured and presented selected data elements from the ILS to interviewees who were asked to evaluate how they would use each element in decision making An Analysis of Decision-making Processes in Public Libraries Tzvee David Morris,1900 Decision-making in Collection Development Beatrice Kovacs,North Carolina. Combined School and Public Libraries, 1998 Conclusions on the Effects of Decisionmaking Behavior on the Use of Information Consumer Dynamics, inc, 1980 Managing Public Libraries in the 21st Century Pat Woodrum, 1989 Prepare yourself for the challenges that are certain to be facing the public library system in the coming years Managing Public Libraries in the 21st Century predicts the types of management planning collections building funding and governing structures and services that will be needed in the 21st century The contributors address some of the most pressing questions with which the profession must be prepared to deal including What management skills will be required to administer the public library in the coming years How can educators best prepare their students for public library administration How will library funds be distributed in the future The answers to these and many other important questions are highlighted in this informative new book Public librarians as well as library school faculty and students will find this volume to be fascinating and indispensable

The Decision-Making Process for Library Collections Beatrice Kovacs, 1990-04-20 A considerable variety of information for libraries planning materials selection policies is relayed in reviews of the relevant literature and in case studies of typical special public academic and school libraries The case studies consider the location and size of each library as well as its budget organizational chart and materials selection procedure In all a good collection well organized and easy to use Actual collection development policies are appended along with bibliography and index Booklist As an outgrowth of the author's discovery that very little material exists discussing how to develop a library collection this book seeks to identify how some experienced selectors think while deciding to buy not buy or discard materials from their collections While subject areas or types of materials for which selectors are responsible may be vastly different the author found that all selectors do collection development in the same way and consider the same types of issues and problems in their decision making process The book then is designed to help librarians identify this process and understand the theoretical as well as practical aspects of building collections Based on information gathered over a period of six years in research at academic public school and special libraries the book will be just as valuable to experienced practitioners of collection development as it will be to students and newcomers to the field The first section discusses decision making and collection development including general trends theories and literature and organizational administration The second section provides case studies of four different types of libraries public school academic and special Each type is represented by studies of four specific libraries with a summary concluding each set of libraries Finally a third section draws conclusions based on the case studies covering dynamic factors affecting the decision making process as well as the process itself The book concludes with a group of appendices a bibliography and an index This important work will be an essential reference source for courses in library science and for working librarians in all types of institutions as well as a valuable addition to college university and public libraries Decision-making at the Level of Middle Management Ahmad Fouad M. Library Planning and Decision-making Systems Morris Hamburg,1974 The problems of managing libraries have been multiplying The operations of libraries have become increasingly complex involving in many cases mechanization centralization and computerization of library services The size and scope of collections have grown rapidly as they attempt to keep up with the geometric expansion of knowledge and so have the variety of services offered or contemplated and the expectations of users These kinds of change and growth have made it more important than ever that libraries utilize comprehensive frameworks for planning and decision making concerning their operations and resources and the major focus of this book is on the development of such analytical frameworks for university and large public library systems It is in the spirit of making a contribution to the development of such frameworks Professor Hamburg writes that this book has been written Since there is an inseparable need not only for improved library statistical data systems but also for the above mentioned frameworks for rational planning and decision making we have devoted considerable effort to the development of analytical models that might assist library administrators in making decisions that would maximize the flow of benefits imparted to the communities the library serves Some of the results of this model building effort are reported in these pages Some of the methods discussed in this text fall within the discipline known as management science or operations research There is a large communications gap between librarians who use English to make themselves understood and management scientists who routinely use mathematics as a language We have tried to communicate clearly to those concerned with library management and except in parts of Chapter 4 we have managed to keep the presentation on a verbal rather than a mathematical level The six chapters are entitled Introduction and Summary Library Objectives and Overall Performance Measures A Framework for Library Decision Making Library Models and Empirical Findings Development of a Management Information System for Libraries and Higher Level Decision Making
